Federal jury indicts two auto makers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's two largest auto manufacturers, General Motors and Ford were indicted by a federal grand jury Monday on charges of conspiring to restrict competition in the fleet market, the Justice Department announced.

The two-count indictment was filed together with a companion civil suit in U. S. District Court in Detroit.

General Motors and Ford quickly responded.

Ford said, "accusations in the indictment are not true," and GM said it will seek an immediate trial, confident it will be vindicated and the government's charges shown to have "no basis in fact."

Named as unindicted co-conspirators were the National Automobile Dealers Association, a trade association of new-car dealers franchised by the automobile manufacturers and Peterson, Howell & Heather Inc., the nation's largest automobile-leasing company.

The indictment and complaint charges that General Motors and Ford have conspired and conspired with NADA, Peterson, Howell & Heather and others who are unnamed to unreasonably restrain and monopolize the manufacture, sale and distribution of automobiles for the fleet market.

The market, which consists of large-volume automobile purchases accounted for approximately 12 per cent of the new cars registered in the United States in 1969. During that year, approximately one million automobiles, having a value of about $2.5 billion, were sold or leased in the fleet market.

GM and Ford currently account for about 75 per cent of automobiles sold or leased in the fleet market, the indictment said.

Ag oceanographer named to serve on Academy of Sciences committee

Dr. Sayed Z. El Sayed, A&M oceanographer who specializes in Antarctic primary productivity, has been appointed to the National Academy of Sciences Committee on Polar Research.

He was appointed to the 15-member committee by Dr. Philip Handler, NAS president, upon nomination by Dr. Laurence M. Gould, chairman.

The appointment is for three years, through March, 1975.

El-Sayed serves on the polar research committee's panel for biology and medical sciences, one of nine standing panels. He also is a member of the steering committee for a Ross Ice Shelf Drilling Project. The group will meet May 4 in Washington.

The TAMU associate professor also is member of working groups on biology and oceanography of the Scientific Committee On Antarctic Research (SCAR) and of the National Science Foundation panel on Arctic Ice Dynamics
