TMA To Enroll Civilians

Enrollment in the Texas Maritime Academy has been expanded this fall to include students who want to prepare themselves for land-based maritime careers without being required to live on campus, participate in the corps of cadets or go on summer cruises.

Dr. William Clayton, dean of A&M's College of Marine Sciences and Maritime Resources and acting TMA superintendent, said students enrolling in the special program will be offered technical or management courses instead of the naval science courses required for cadets.

Students enrolled in the new program will have the same opportunity as TMA cadets to earn Bachelor of Science degrees in either marine engineering or marine transportation. The special program will not lead to award of Coast Guard licenses or reserve commissions, nor will the students in the special program receive the federal subsidy awarded to TMA cadets.

Clayton said students earning degrees through the special program might pursue careers as port managers, port engineers or work in a wide variety of management jobs within the maritime industry.

Students will be able to enroll in the special program as freshmen or can study the first year or two at a community college or at a four-year college or university, Clayton noted.

Young men will not be required to live on campus or participate in the academy's annual summer cruise, although they may apply for both, the dean said.

Campus housing is currently provided during the regular school year aboard the "Texas Clipper" TMA training ship which is docked adjacent to the campus. The campus' first dormitories are in the final stages of planning, Dean Clayton added.

He said coeds will be eligible to enroll in the special marine engineering and transportation programs on a day-student basis.

TMA was established in 1962 as part of A&M. The academy was made a part of the university's new College of Marine Sciences and Maritime Resources last year. It is the newest of the nation's six major maritime academies and the only one on the Gulf of Mexico.

Academic Affairs Group To Study Naval School Need

The Academic Affairs Committee plans to study the need for a naval architecture school at A&M.

The committee will make recommendations to the Administration based on its findings.

Currently there are only four schools of Naval Architecture in the United States.

Other new committee projects planned for this fall include an admission evaluation, a university catalogue analysis, an academic listing project and a university and system self-study. In the admission evaluation special emphasis will be placed upon admission procedures for aliens and out-of-state students.

In the university catalogue analysis the committee plans to recommend the addition of a section concerning campus facilities. This section would include a non-technical description of university research establishments.

Under the system analysis the creation of a statewide medical school complex within the framework of the TAMU system will be recommended.

In the academic listing project a list of all laboratories, centers, institutes and scholarly establishments of the university will be prepared. Such a list could be used by the University Catalogue or in Student Senate publications.

Other projects of the Academic Committee that are being carried over from last spring include the Free University, pass-fail evaluation, student tutoring services and academic awards.

Students interested in becoming involved with one or more of these projects can fill out an application form in the Student Senate office.

Williams Lauds
Students At Mothers' Meeting

Praise for students and plans for the future highlighted Dr. Jack K. Williams' remarks Saturday at the fall meeting of the executive board of the Federation of Texas A&M University Mother's Clubs.

"If you have any doubts what 'young America' is all about," the TAMU president noted, "I invite you to stay here next week and see the best cross-section anywhere in the state or nation."

The TAMU president said one of the university's most pleasant problems this fall is finding dormitory spaces for students signing up for the Corps of Cadets, in which participation is expected to be the highest in at least five years.

He outlined the institution's overall construction program, which currently includes 14 projects. He said plans call for the campus to be "in shape" by 1976, the university's centennial year.

Mrs. Henry G. Creel Jr. of Fort Worth, president of the 52-club federation, responded by pointing out that "this is one campus where parents really feel welcome."

More than 50 federation officers from throughout the state, including the majority of the area club presidents, attended the session, which involved a business meeting in addition to the talks by university officials.

Mrs. Creel said the federation has approved a list of approximately 15 projects and activities to be recommended for support this year by various mother's clubs. The program includes continued support for scholarships, the university health center and the Singing Cadets.
