Airport Noise Disturbs Citizens; Cause of Unusual Complications

If you see a certain lad walking around who is 6 feet 2 and still shooting up at only 14 years of age, don't credit his height on genes, chromosomes or heredity. Airplanes did it.
If you've never lived at the end of a runway of a major airfield, count your blessings.
Just imagine huge four-motor passenger planes, screaming 200 feet over your home, all throttles out, fighting for altitude.

Whales Trained For Torpedoes

Whales have been successfully trained to retrieve dummy torpedoes from the ocean floor, the Navy says. Experts believe they could also be used to locate mines.
The whale-training experiment, called Operation Deep OPS, followed earlier secret experiments to train porpoises and sea lions to detect enemy mines and frogmen.
The whale test, announced Tuesday, started in 1969 and ended in October of last year in waters off Hawaii. Both a 1,200-pound pilot whale and a 5,500-pound killer whale were used, although the pilot whale proved more reliable and controllable, the Navy said.
In the experiment, a whale was directed by signals from dummy torpedoes to depths of 1,654 feet. Equipped with a large yellow rubber bit clamped in its mouth, the whale swam to the torpedo and clamped the device onto it.
A large balloon then inflated automatically, and the torpedo floated to the surface. The whale, meanwhile, swam to the recovery ship where it was rewarded with a fish.
The Navy said the project demonstrates the feasibility of "a simple, highly responsive and economical-to-use system of recov-eries," using trained whales.
