Revised Texas Constitution A 'Must', Declares Jaworski

State constitutional revision is a "must" before there can be effective decentralization of the control now vested in Washington, Houston attorney Leon Jaworski declared Saturday at A&M.

Jaworski, immediate past president of the American Bar Association, spoke at commencement exercises for TAMU's 990-student mid-term graduating class.

Commissioning ceremonies followed for 127 of the students, with Gen. Jack J. Catton, commander of the Air Force Logistics Command, assuring them that patriotism "is alive and well." He also urged the new officers not to be discouraged in times of tightening budgets and defense cuts.

Jaworski, referring to passage of Amendment 4 in the November general election said a "forward step is in progress to accomplish a much-needed revision of the Texas Constitution."

"The unvarnished truth is that this state cannot effectively discharge its responsibilities in numerous areas of governmental function without updating constitutional provisions to meet the needs of today's society," the prominent attorney noted.

Jaworski left little doubt that he feels the federal government is too big, an assessment which he notes is shared by President Nixon.

"On balance patriotism is alive and well," observed General Catton, "and although it may not come shining through in living color each night into your living room—certainly in this room."

He told the newly commissioned officers "you will find that your dedication and self-satisfaction will be directly proportioned to the depth of your share of a concept, and the single most important fundamental for you here today is patriotism."

Rather than being discouraged in times of tightening budgets and defense cuts, the general encouraged the new officers "to recognize the challenge and to dedicate their service to doing something positive about meeting the challenge."

The second proposal included the dissolving of the MSC Directorate Leadership Committee and turning over this committee's projects to the vice-president of programs for the remainder of the year.

"In the past, this committee has had two primary activities," said Walsler. "These were the conference in the fall and spring leadership training."

The proposal also states "that a Leadership Training Program shall be established by the Council officers and it shall be the specific responsibility of the Executive Vice-president of Projects to execute this program" for 1973-74.

It was also decided at this meeting that TAMU's Free University shall be under the jurisdiction of the Council with the executive vice-president of projects responsible for executing the program.

"Bill Hartsfield, now in charge of 'Free University' as handled by the Senate, wants to make sure it is continued after he graduates in May and wants in some way to get into MSC programs," said Joe Arredondo, executive vice president of committees.

The council also accepted the first policy proposal concerning space allocation and building use as submitted by Don Webb, vice president of operations.

The remaining policies submitted by the Building Studies Committee concerned the use of the southeast corner of the new MSC for organizational purposes.

Four policy changes in the MSC Council Building Policies were approved by the council. The first three policies now read as follows:

- 1) "All functions, projects, programs, concessions, etc., proposed by clubs, organizations, or individuals, not sponsored by the MSC and occurring on the grounds of the MSC or in the building shall be approved by the director of the MSC, his designated representative, and/or the MSC Council."
2) "All drinks and food shall be consumed in the designated eating areas and approved food services rooms only."

3) "Those areas that have been designed for special purposes, e.g., piano rooms, listening rooms, etc., shall only be used for those special purposes."

The fourth policy reading, "no unmarried women shall have male visitors in the guest room area," was deleted. More proposals are presently under discussion and will be voted on in January.
