States Given Leeway In Apportioning

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court Wednesday gave state legislatures considerable leeway in reapportioning themselves.

The 5 to 3 ruling said strict population equality is not constitutionally required when the states want to maintain traditional county and city boundaries.

The court specifically approved a Virginia plan with a range of at least 16.4 per cent from the largest to the smallest district in the House of Delegates.

The plan had been upset by a four-judge federal court in Richmond which went on to substitute for it one that broke political boundaries in 12 instances but reduced the population variance to a little more than 10 per cent.

Acting on an appeal by state officials, the high court restated the General Assembly's scheme with the exception of a Senate district in Norfolk.

Justice William H. Rehnquist said for the majority that even in 1964 when the court first applied the "one-man, one-vote" standard to state legislative districts it allowed greater flexibility from perfect equality than in drawing U.S. congressional lines.

He said "application of the absolute equality test of the court's rulings in congressional cases to state legislative redistricting may impair the normal functioning of state and local governments."

But Justice William J. Brennan Jr., dissented, and said the court had never held that different constitutional standards were to be applied to state legislative and U.S. congressional reapportionment.

In a 7 to 2 ruling it held that the states are not required to advance the date of prisoners' parole hearings on the basis of the time they spent in jail awaiting trial.

By an 8 to 1 vote the court overturned the conviction of Leon Chambers of Woodville, Miss., for the murder of a part-time policeman—a crime to which another man had confessed.

In a 6 to 3 ruling it turned down an appeal by Anthony Louis Tacon, a New Yorker who claimed his conviction in Arizona of selling marijuana without a chance to appear at his own trial was unconstitutional.

Stack Sampling Short Course Scheduled For Mid-Summer

The Chemical Engineering Department will sponsor a week-long stack sampling short course beginning July 16.

The course is designed to aid industry in compliance with Rule 9 of the Texas Air Control Board, which states that all smokestacks in Texas that emit pollutants must be sampled and the results submitted to the Texas Air Control Board.

William B. Harris of the Chemical Engineering Department will head the course. He said special training was needed by industry to achieve correct and accurate sampling.

"We will offer the course to chemists, engineers, and technicians responsible for measurement of pollutants occurring in stack emissions," he said, "and we will train participants in both theory and practice so they will be able to select methods of stack sampling appropriate to their own conditions."

Part of the course will include lecture topics, but most of the course will deal with laboratory and work sections where participants will utilize basic principles involved in the calibration, installation and operation of air sampling devices.

Arrangements have been made to use the stacks located at the TAMU power house for practice purposes. The planned "final exam" for the course will be actual hands-on testing of the A&M flue gasses.

"The course will hopefully produce a degree of competency in the participants which will enable them to take accurate measurements and deliver to the Texas Air Control Board usable data for use in alleviating the pollution problem in Texas," Harris said.

Additional information on the course, which will be limited to 25 participants per session, can be obtained from Harris at the Chemical Engineering Department. Harris said plans called for additional course sessions to be offered if demand warranted.

"The need to preserve the integrity of political subdivisions as political subdivisions may in some instances justify small variations in the population of districts from which state legislators are elected," he wrote.

"But that interest can hardly be asserted in justification of malapportioned congressional districts."

The high court also handed down decisions in three other cases.

 Brought To You By The Student Government

We'll meet with college seniors and graduate students on some 67 campuses this spring.

We're listening. To what new engineers and computer science graduates have to say. About their goals. About their professional responsibility to Spaceship Earth.

We're also talking. About the opportunities at Boeing this year. And the years that follow.

Frankly, we want the brightest graduates in the country to be inspired by our work and the Boeing environment. To feel a compatibility. And to rank Boeing as No. 1 job choice.

Before we get together, you should know a little about us.

Naturally, much of our business is related to the airline industry.

Jetliner orders have come faster than we ever predicted. Orders from the 727-200 have passed the 1000 mark. We've sold ten 707s to China. The 747 continues to be queen of the sky. And we're looking into a brand new jetliner now labeled the 7X7.

Boeing is involved in a number of defense programs, space projects, development of a short takeoff and landing (STOL) aircraft, and missile and helicopter production.

Boeing Computer Services, Inc., is concerned with general business and financial systems, medical systems, automated manufacturing techniques, inventory management, scientific and engineering problem solving techniques and computer operating systems.

We have also started programs on: 1) people movers to help unclog traffic problems in cities; 2) hydrofoils to move people and freight over water faster; 3) reduction of aircraft noise; and 4) pollution control processes that have application in desalination and as treatment of industrial waste. We are also at work on programs that can lead to better understanding of this planet's natural resources.

If this sounds like the kind of equal opportunity employer you're looking for, let's get together at the Placement Office.

Our interviewer will be on campus next week interviewing AE, EE, ME, CS and IE graduates.
