

Parents Should Praise Child

Typically, parents punish children more than praise them, according to one authority.

Jane Fleischer, specialist in family life education with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, stressed that punishment isn't the sole method for guiding behavior.

"There's also the positive approach — which encourages a child's good behavior through rewards.

"Nevertheless, positive guidance isn't simply rewarding good behavior instead of punishing the undesirable — it involves guiding by reward.

"When using this approach, parents should remember three basics involving rewards," Miss Fleischer continued.

"First, when a child behaves in a desirable way reward him immediately. Thus, he learns what things or actions will gain a reward.

"Second, rewards should apply to a child — such as something special or something he enjoys. This varies with children, depending on their interests and personal likes and dislikes.

Miss Fleischer pointed out that the strongest rewards are those which "makes a child feel good inside."

Examples are "Thank you for helping with the dishes — they're sparkling clean" and "Pick up your toys, then find a story and we'll read."

"Third, don't wait until the ultimate goal is achieved. Reward progress — encouragement is needed along the way."

"After receiving a reward, a child is likely to repeat the act to get another 'good feeling.' Children learn through repetition, since behavior changes slowly."

Turning to punishment, the specialist emphasized that behavior taught through punishment is usually difficult to change.

"For example, a child guided by punishment into being quiet and subdued may not easily become outgoing and aggressive later."

At this point, Miss Fleischer requested that parents take a close look at their own situations — by answering the following questions.

"What are your children doing that meets your approval?"

"What are you doing to encourage repetition of those actions? How do you relay your satisfaction or approval?"

"What words are used in rewarding children? What others could be used more effectively?"

"Remember, the goal of guidance is to change the desire — not just the behavior," the specialist concluded.

Feminist Traces History Of Hawaiian Male Chauvinism

HONOLULU (AP) — Hawaii's women remain skeptical of their rights, even though the state legislature was the first to ratify the women's rights amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

They trace their skepticism back to the early 19th Century and a 6-foot, 300-pound woman's libber named Kaahumanu. This strapping female won women's rights but then "blew it all when the missionaries came," says Barbara Milz, president of the Honolulu chapter of the National Organization of Women.

The situation in Kaahumanu's day would rankle any women's advocate. Members of the fairer sex were forbidden to eat pork, bananas, and coconuts. And never were they to eat at the same table as men. The Hawaiians called those kapus, or taboos, punishable by death. You might also call it discrimination.

Kaahumanu, the wife of the King Kamehameha I, changed that. After her husband's death, she persuaded his son Kamehameha II, to share the throne. The amazon became Kuhina Nui — sort of prime minister.

With that, Kamehameha II's male chauvinism began receding, and in November, 1819, he made a symbolic move of joining the women's table at a great feast. Later, he lifted the ban on forbidden foods.

But according to Mrs. Milz, Kaahumanu began relinquishing her powers after the missionaries arrived, and the post of Kuhina Nui was abolished. "Women's rights in Hawaii have been going straight downhill ever since," she said.

"Today, the danger is that women may see this amendment and think they've won their rights and there's nothing more to be done," she added. Most women queried agreed with Mrs. Milz that the war has not been won.

Hawaii's women have a lot at stake. Unlike most states, they frequently are employed as taxi drivers, barbers, service station attendants and in other jobs traditionally associated with men.

Because of the high cost of living here, nearly half of Hawaii's women over 16 are employed.

"But they are stuck in the lower echelons — cocktail waitresses instead of bartenders, secretaries instead of executives," said Nancy Joy, of the Kaahumanu Center, an information gathering center on women's liberation.

Embroidery In Spring Fashion

Embroidery and lace promise to soften spring fashions — for women and men.

"Fashions going dressy will rely on embroidery, very much a part of the spring scene," Marilyn Brown maintained.

The consumer education-clothing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, said several reasons account for its revival.

"Increased popularity of at-home clothes for lounging and entertaining caused a demand for special trims to add elegance and dressy appearances. Embroideries and lace answered this need.

"Increased home sewing is another reason.

"People are always on the lookout for something different. Embroidery is just that — exciting and colorful, with dimension and surface appeal."

Miss Brown noted that "big embroidery comebacks" include eyelets, lace, embroidered emblems and appliques.

"Embroidery will appear on checks, plaids, solids and patterned fabrics. Color will be clean, clear and crisp.

"Sportswear, including men's sports shirts, and women's dressier garments will feature it," she added.

APO Project Raises $500

Alpha Phi Omega's bathtub pull raised nearly $500 in Bryan and College Station for the Heart Fund.

The effort by A&M's Xi Delta Chapter contributed to a $3,000 total by the East Texas Section of the national service fraternity, according to project chairman Mike Holley of Seabrook.

The bathtub pulled by APO brothers traveled from Houston to Huntsville, College Station, Bryan, San Marcos and Austin over the weekend. It rolled through here Saturday afternoon.

The East Texas contribution was presented to Heart Fund drive officials Sunday in Austin.

Holley considers the Xi Delta chapter effort a success, especially since numerous APO members were tied up in Military Weekend activities.
