Taped Lecture Series Initiated

A&M's Center for Urban Programs has initiated a taped lecture series to complement its many continuing education programs and short courses.

The programs, taped on the popular cassette tapes, are designed to enable those who cannot attend short courses offered by the center to benefit from the courses they miss.

Dr. Richard E. Thomas, director of the Center for Urban Programs, said lectures presented at seminars and short courses are recorded on the small tape cassettes. A study guide is then developed to complement the tape.

"We are currently working on taped programs aimed only at airport managers," Dr. Thomas said, "but we expect to add in the very near future several more programs to our collection."

The programs will be offered to governmental agencies and corporations on either a rental or purchase basis, he continued. Large organizations may be interested in purchasing the programs as they are released to build up a library of the recorded lectures, Dr. Thomas pointed out.

Two taped lectures are currently being use-tested by leading airport managers throughout the country. The lectures, presented by Dr. Arthur S. Devany and Dr. James Miller III, both of the Economics Department, were part of recent airport managers' short course at Texas A&M.

The tapes are accompanied by carefully prepared study guides, designed to draw the listener into a frame of mind that would be receptive to the tapes. A post-lecture exam is given at the back of the study guide, and results inform the listener if he should listen to the tape again for specific concepts.

"This playback ability," Dr. Thomas said, "greatly enhances the program. The listener is able to go back and check specific points, and in this capability he has an advantage over those who heard the lecture live."

The taped lecture program is an in-house development, produced by Center for Urban Program staff members without the aid of grants or other funds, according to Dr. Thomas.

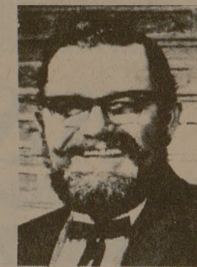

"Although we are presently confining our efforts to refining our tape-study guide program, we will offer our expertise to any other department within Texas A&M that wishes to formulate their own taped lecture programs," he said.
