

Demos Hold Telethon For Campaign Funds

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who convinced America to eat its chicken dinner out of a bucket now is trying to merchandise the idea that consumers should pay for political campaigns out of their pocket.

"I think the American people would like to feel they own their government," says John Y. Brown Jr. Armed with that belief and the selling techniques that turned Kentucky Fried Chicken from a local restaurant into the world's second largest food operation, Brown is involved in his second political telethon in as many years.

Brown, 39, whose interests now include a professional basketball team his wife operates and a chain of $1 hamburger outlets run from trolley cars, is the driving force behind the Democratic party's telethon, scheduled for 5½ hours of prime time Saturday night on the NBC television network.

Brown borrowed money to buy the fried chicken business in 1964 and sold it two years ago at a $35-million profit. He convinced his party to have last year's pre-convention telethon and a network to televise it, then put up $1.5 million to back it.

It is Brown's hope that Saturday night's extravaganza will net more than last year's $2 million and in the process serve as a basis for reform of the method in which political campaigns are financed.

Brown believes political campaigns must be financed by the public if they are to be honest.

"In watching the process work, you just have to conclude that if you're going to win in politics, you have got to be a deal maker," Brown said in an interview. "The No. 1 one problem in our government is unquestionably the way we finance political campaigns. That sets the structure where it corrupts honest men."

Ex-SDS Leader Appears Here

Randy Bullock, formerly active with the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), will be in Bryan-College Station Friday.

Bullock participated in mass protests in Washington, D.C., New York and Chicago, and later discovered a new life-style at a mass Christian gathering. He will appear Friday on Channel 3 at 3 p.m., and on MTV channel 9 at 7 p.m. He made a personal appearance at noon at the answer, 501 University Drive, and scheduled another at 9 p.m. at All Faiths Chapel.

Bullock will talk about his political activities in the front lines of the radical left, his deep involvement with drugs and his subsequent change in attitude, as he now says that his most prized possession is his personal relationship with God. The public is invited to both personal appearances.

Bullock is the featured star in the new film TIME-TO-RUN, which is coming to the Campus Theater Sept. 26 through Oct. 2. For further information, call 846-1015.

Confederation Set for Sports

Consolidation is planned for club sports and the Intramural Office in a decision reached Thursday night by these organizations.

Dennis Corrington, director of Intramural sports, has drawn up a plan to confederate the dozen sports clubs into one organized body.

In hopes of "making sure that everyone gets their fair share," Corrington suggested the organizations give up some independence and gain some leverage.

All club sports run on relatively no money and usually end up begging for any extra funds they can't raise themselves. By uniting under one camp, they hope to receive more funds from the Bookstore Allocation Committee which will meet on Sept. 26.
