'No Sex Please, We're British' Cast Displays Off-Stage Personalities

By JULIA JONES
Getting an interview behind the scenes during a play is better than a circus. Actors wander around with makeup that seems ludicrous off stage. Heavy lines that look faintly Chinese circle their eyes. Pancake makeup emphasizes the wrinkles, till the faces look like slightly Simian masks.
The costumes give an air of a manequin party after the store closes; and the people are different. They are more open, and pardon the cliché, more dramatic. Such as it was for Monday's local performance of Noel Harrison's "No Sex Please, We're British."
Take Harrison's eyes for instance. They are a very dramatic blue. Behind the makeup and the charcoal line his eyes are big and very kind. He says "I want to do things that touch people. This play is alright, it makes people laugh, but I would like to do something that touches them."

You get the impression that he really cares, it is more than a job. He talked about going back to his farm in Nova Scotia. "The next thing I am going to do is go home and work on my album. I have been working on it for a year. I would rather do that than anything, work with my music." He says the words "my music" like some people would say "love" or mother.
He says that being compared with his father, Rex Harrison, no longer bothers him. "It used to, years ago, but it doesn't any longer." He looks rather distracted when saying this, as if he has said it many times before, and never quite meant it.
When asked about the problem of finding work he said, "I have never been out of work, I'm always busy doing something." He once had a television series; but it is hard for even the best actors to find work.
In the meantime he tours in this play and makes "his music." He is very patient with reporters and the people around him. Watching him with the cast, one would not know who was the star. A very nice man.
There are other members of the cast around. They are the perennial character actors. They will never be stars and that is the way they like it. One mustached actor is dressed in a pin-striped suit with a red carnation in the button hole. He tells me that he plays the banker. In a very British accent he told why he was in acting. "I started to act at age three in our local groups in the village. When I found out at age 14 that they paid money for something that was so much fun, I said that's for me. And I've been doing it ever since." He no longer looks like a banker sort. More like one of the English eccentrics the movies are so fond of. You have seen his type in a million late night oldies, usually as the butler... "yes, Madam, you rang."

One lady in a red wig, who is taking Maureen O'Hara's part in the play, said she got into acting to "overcome shyness. I am still shy, but hand me a script and I can do anything."
There is also an actor, who is playing a minor part, who claimed the play "is filth." It hints around about sex, but never comes out and says anything. That's what is filthy about it."
From the look on the faces of the people around him, it was not a popular view. One actress, also wearing a red wig, said she is "playing a hooker honey." She is dressed for the part, but her face is too nice.

Perhaps the most interesting person with the group was the tour driver. He has been driving buses for theater groups for fourteen years. He has worked with many stars and seen a lot of plays.
"Lauren Bacall is my favorite. That lady will say anything. She says what she thinks and nothing else. Not like Miss Carol Channing." He pronounces "Miss" like he was saying poison. "Always the star. I told her I didn't care if she was president." He reminisces about the people he has known. "There is nobody like theater people. The warmest, best people around. Do anything for you. They always treated me good. I love tour. We're one big happy family."
After tonight they will go on to other towns. One town a night until December 9. Everyone denies that the tour is a hassle. They play games on the bus, sing, and watch the countryside. Where they really come alive is on the WACO — Four men and two women were held in jail for lack of bond Monday, following the weekend seizure by federal narcotics agents of an estimated $1.4 million worth of marijuana.

The six were arrested in a restaurant after 1,400 pounds of the weed was allegedly found in a pickup truck under a pile of oranges.

Israel continues for now without pause, the Defense Department said Monday.
"We're doing what we were doing before," said Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim.
DEARBORN, Mich. — The United Auto Workers authorized its 185,000 Ford workers to strike the auto maker Friday if a new national contract hasn't been negotiated by 10 a.m. that day.
UAW Vice President Ken Bannan made the announcement today at Ford headquarters shortly after he served the nation's second largest auto maker with the deadline notification.

TEL AVIV — Israel claimed its Suez Canal forces were coming under Egyptian fire on most sectors of the Suez front early Tuesday, six hours after a United Nations ceasefire deadline had passed.
It was the second such charge by Israel since the cease-fire took effect early Monday evening. The first announcement said Egyptian forces opened fire "in numerous locations along the ceasefire line."
Egypt denied the initial charge soon after it was made.

Phi Delta Gamma Holds Initiation

The first graduate women's honor society on campus, Phi Delta Gamma was initiated Saturday night. This is the only Greek letter fraternal organization that accepts women in all professions.
It is open to all women with a bachelor's degree who are enrolled in graduate school, and faculty and staff members who are or have been engaged in graduate study.

affords us an opportunity to see women in other professions and share experiences with them."
The local chapter, Alpha Alpha's officers are: Ethel Tsutsui, president; Carol Anderson, vice president; Bonnie Stadelman, secretary; Bonnie Beaver, treasurer; Patricia Self, Registrar and Josephine Berg, editor.

"High professional ideals, intellectual and spiritual friendship, and a high degree of scholarship achievement" were stressed as aims of the group, according to Jeanne S. Gessay, National President. The motto of the organization is friendship, justice and knowledge.
Gessay conducted the installation of members and the elected officers were introduced. Other visiting officers were: Marcia G. Abbott, National Vice President; Janet K. Mahlman, Midwest Regional Coordinator; Vera E. Pletcher, National Convention Chairman; and Laverne Wachuta, Delta Chapter Representative.
Gessay said that "Phi Delta Gamma was a part of the women's movement" and that the reason for its existence was "communication between women on their own campus as well as on other campuses. We represent many professional fields and it
