

SBA Branded Corrupt

WASHINGTON (AP)—A congressional investigator testified Tuesday that corruption and bungling management permeate the Small Business Administration.

House Banking Committee investigator Curtis Prins said the SBA also has been politicized and in many cases ends up helping the wealthy who have connections rather than the disadvantaged and struggling small businessmen.

Prins testified at the start of hearings by a subcommittee on alleged corruption in the SBA. He said that the White House on several occasions put pressure on the agency to grant loans to favored businessmen.

The bulk of Prins' testimony covered the Richmond SBA office where he said more than $11.7 million in loans and lease guarantees went to businesses connected to Joseph C. Palumbo of Charlottesville, Va., brother-in-law of the director, Thomas Regan, who has been suspended.

Palumbo could not be reached for comment. Regan has denied any wrongdoing.

Prins also told the small business subcommittee, that he has done preliminary investigations into SBA offices in 21 other cities.

Asked the extent of criminal offenses, Prins said "We know there is criminal involvement in some of the other SBA offices. I can't say now how widespread it is but it runs the gamut from bribes to mismanagement to individuals who set themselves up as SBA loan processors, particularly with minorities."

Prins said the White House intervened on behalf of Bennie McRae, a former professional football player who had campaigned for President Nixon and now has a construction business in Virginia.

Prins quoted a memo written by the Richmond director, Regan, to his loan officers who had twice turned down a loan application for McRae as saying: "Please get out the papers on McRae as soon as possible. This is a White House case and the heat is on."

McRae, reached in Newport News, told a reporter that "this is the first I've heard of any White House pressure concerning the approval of loan guarantees," he said his loan applications were processed through normal SBA channels "and before they were approved, no one had approached the White House on the matter."

McRae denied that his activities as a campaigner for Nixon had anything to do with the loan approvals.

Kohoutek Watched in Co-operative Effort

TAMU scientists will study the bright comet, Kohoutek, with instruments at McDonald Observatory during December and January.

The research program will be a cooperative endeavor of the University of Texas at Austin and TAMU.

UT-Austin operates the West Texas observatory, which has 107 and 82-inch reflecting telescopes.

Dr. Ronald A. Schorn and Dr. George Kattawar of the Physics Department will investigate the chemical composition and structure of Comet Kohoutek.

Schorn said Dr. Harlan J. Smith, the observatory director, has made available prime observing time on the 82-inch telescope Dec. 3-16 and Jan. 7-15.

Discovered last March by Dr. Lubos Kohoutek at Hamburg Observatory in West Germany, the comet is now located in the early morning sky and approaching the sun. It will become visible to the unaided eye in the next week or so.

The comet, fifth discovered this year, will pass closest to the sun on the morning of Dec. 28. It will emerge from the solar glare into the evening sky a few days later. At and near perihelion, the comet is expected to surpass in brilliance the brightest star now visible in the evening sky.

Schorn, the professional astronomer, made extensive use of the McDonald facility to study Mars and Venus while with the Jet Propulsion Laboratory and NASA. He joined the faculty last summer.

Schorn and Kattawar's work will be supported by a College of Science grant, made available by Dean John M. Prescott from the Organized Research Fund.

Absentee Ballots Available

Absentee voting for the Houston elections ends at 5 p.m. on Friday. Voters may mail a voter registration slip and an application to Houston as long as they are received before the 5 p.m. Friday deadline.

Applications are available from the Young Republicans office in Room 109 of Bizzell Hall through 5 p.m. Thursday.

Forestry Student Wins $250 Award Twice

Scott William Haupt, senior forestry student at TAMU, was awarded the $250 W. Goodrich Jones Scholarship for the second time.

Haupt is a "Distinguished Student" and will graduate in December. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Haupt Jr., 845 N. 8th Street in Allentown.

The scholarship is part of a permanent gift to TAMU by Dr. Luther G. Jones, retired A&M agronomy professor and his sister Doris G. Jones in memory of their father.

Student Y Has Gift-Wrap Service Again

Student Y Association is holding its annual Christmas gift wrapping service which starts today and runs through Dec. 11, 216 A of the Student Programs Office.

The service is free to Y members and costs non-Y members

25 cents per package. Gifts should be deposited and a claim check picked up. The Y asks that gifts be left for 24 hours to be wrapped. Claim checks are required to pick up gifts. Gifts can also be wrapped for shipment through the mail at no extra charge.

DPC Offers Free Short Courses

The Data Processing Center will offer tuition-free short courses in Job Control Language and the use of Calcomb plotters.

Faculty and students can schedule the courses at times that are convenient to them and the only requirement is a good understanding of the computer language,

FORTRAN. The courses use the IBM 360 computer system and plotter systems used for graphic output of reports and publications.

For additional information and registration forms see Chuck Adams at the Data Processing Center.

TTI Studies Paving Roads with Ashes

A research project at TAMU dealing in pavement material from asphalt and incinerator residue has been awarded additional findings of $327.

The study, headed by Dr. W. B. Ledbetter, professor of Civil Engineering, is based on laboratory findings made by TAMU researchers that show the benefits of incinerator residue as a good road base material.

To verify the findings, Brown and Root, a Houston paving concern, will construct an experimental pavement section made with asphalt and incinerator residue from the Holmes Road Incinerator Plant in Houston.

The Texas Transportation Institute will monitor the project through a research contract with the Federal Highway Administration during construction.

The stretch of road, which will be the final section of pavement on Bingle Road between McDade and Norton Streets in Houston, will be evaluated for three years by TTI.

Dr. Ledbetter said work should begin on the paved stretch in Houston shortly after the first of the year. He added that the use of incinerator residue will reduce the rapid depletion of natural aggregates.

Anti-Stall Aircraft Engine Being Developed

TAMU aerospace engineer Howard Chevalier has received an extension grant from the Federal Aviation Administration for further development of a stall-spin accident prevention system.

The system, initially developed without research funding, has been successfully flown on single-engine and twin-engine aircraft at the Flight Mechanics Laboratory.

The device, which has received velocity by Chevalier and staff researchers at the Flight Mechanics Lab.

The FAA, anxious to develop stall prevention devices, earlier awarded Chevalier a $50,000 research grant to further develop the system for use on multi-engine aircraft.

The device Chevalier developed prevents an aircraft from entering a stall situation where lift forces no longer support the aircraft. Stall and spin accidents account for more light plane injuries and fatalities than any other cause, according to FAA figures.

The Texas Engineering Experiment Station-supported project has resulted in a successful cross-country flight and demonstration by Chevalier and Robert Wilke, a Ph.D. candidate and test pilot on the program, at the General Aviation Safety Conference in Princeton, N. J.

Total funding for the project, according to Texas A&M Research Foundation officials, now totals $63,000.
