

How Fuel Price Increases Are Affecting the Nation

By Associated Press
Fuel price increases could raise the cost of living in the United States $27 billion, or nearly 3 per cent next year, Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said Tuesday.

Stein told a congressional committee he based his estimate on an expected 50 per cent increase in fuel prices.

He predicted that a 30 cents a gallon increase in gasoline prices, a major factor in the 50 per cent raise, would be needed to balance supply and demand.

Addressing the Joint Economic Committee's international economics subcommittee, he said no decision has been made on using inflated prices, rationing or taxes to deal with the energy crisis but said higher consumer prices are certain to be a result.

"We've got to face higher energy costs and decide how much we want to pay to the Arabs and how much to ourselves," Stein said.

Stein, who has admitted he and other officials have erred in some previous economic predictions, said unemployment is expected to increase between three-tenths of one per cent and six-tenths of one per cent in 1974.

To lessen its impact, he said, four alternatives are under consideration: increasing defense spending, improving unemployment compensation, expanding public service employment, and stimulating the housing industry.

Meanwhile, the government announced a program using federal computers and census information that could coordinate the organization of car pools for millions of commuters throughout the nation.

The Census Bureau analyzed 1970 census information for 125 metropolitan areas of at least 250,000 persons and found that 31 million of 47.2 million workers drive to work alone.

Under the program information on where commuters live and work could be compiled to ease the forming of commuting groups. Also in Washington, truck drivers threatened to leave the roads Tuesday night as a protest against high fuel prices and lower speed limits.

An independent driver, John Sassi of Newark, Del., told a Senate Public Works subcommittee that drivers were being urged to park their rigs, but Frank Fitzsimmons, president of the Teamsters union, told the subcommittee he had heard nothing about the threatened work stoppage.

In other energy-related developments Tuesday:

• Norbert T. Tiermann, chief of the Federal Highway Administration, said the energy crisis could curtail funds for highway expansion and maintenance. He said the cuts would be caused by a drop in the amount of taxes collected from highway users and on gasoline.

• Commerce Secretary Frederick B. Dent said in New York the government is revising its estimate of the fuel shortage. He refused to speculate in which direction the revision would go, but said no increase is likely in the current estimate that fuel supplies will be off by 17 per cent.

• Charles Elkins, assistant administrator for hazardous materials in the Environmental Protection Agency, said the White House settled a dispute between the EPA and the Atomic Energy Commission, awarding the AEC the authority to set standards on radioactive emissions from atomic plants.

• The Air Transport Association, an airline industry organization, estimated that the fuel allocation program will force the nation's airlines to cancel 2,600 daily departures and lay off more than 25,000 employees.

• The president of the American Petroleum Institute, Frank N. Icard, said that the solution to the energy crisis is in finding more supplies, not simply sharing those that are available.
