

New press, director set for fall semester

Frank H. Wardlaw

Frank H. Wardlaw, director of the University of Texas Press since its establishment in 1950, will join A&M next fall to head a new scholarly press, announced TAMU President Jack K. Williams.

The new operation, to be known as the Texas A&M University Press, will include a general book publishing program with emphasis on books in fields coinciding with the university's principal academic strengths and books designed to serve Texas and the Southwest, Dr. Williams noted.

"We are pleased to have a man of Mr. Wardlaw's prominence in the publishing field join Texas A&M University, and we look forward to developing here a great university press," the TAMU president added. "With his leadership, we have the opportunity to join the select list of universities making available in printed form scholarly works and great books in the arts and humanistic studies."

"My new assignment at Texas A&M is an exciting one," Wardlaw said "I feel that we will have the opportunity to build a publishing program which will present books in fields which are vital to the national welfare. I also welcome the opportunity to continue to serve Texas in the development of a strong and responsible regional program."

"My 24 years at the University of Texas have been good ones," Wardlaw continued, "and I leave with many regrets. But this new challenge that has come to me is too attractive for me to refuse. And we will still be in Texas."

Wardlaw's appointment is effective Sept. 1. His title will be director of the Texas A&M University Press.

The program which he will head represents virtually a new endeavor for TAMU, Dr. Williams noted. It will, however, function in conjunction with a facility known as the A&M Press which has been primarily a printing operation.

A native of South Carolina, Wardlaw attended the University of South Carolina and was a newspaperman in that state before joining the faculty of the U. S. C. School of Journalism in 1938. In 1945 he participated in the establishment of the University of South Carolina Press and became its first director. Five years later he became the first director of the University of Texas Press, now one of the nation's leading scholarly publishing houses.

Wardlaw has served two terms as president of the Association of American University Presses. As chairman of the association's international committee he obtained a grant of $225,000 from the Rockefeller Foundation for a nationwide Latin American Translation program. While serving as association president, he was instrumental in the establishment of CILA (Inter-American Scholarly Book Center) in Mexico City. He served as a member of the association's board of directors for eight years.

He has also served on the board of directors of Franklin Book Programs and on the advisory committees of John Knox Press (Presbyterian) in Richmond and The Henry Francis DuPont Winterthur Museum in Wilmington Delaware. He was a member of the advisory committee for the subventioning of humanistic publications of the National Endowment for the Humanities and has served as a consultant on publication matters to the National Science Foundation.

A member of the Texas Institute of Letters, Wardlaw has twice served as its president. He is the author of one book and has published numerous magazine articles, including several in "The Saturday Review" and "Harper's." He is a member of the Headliner's Club and Town and Gown Club in Austin and The Philosophical Society of Texas. He is listed in "Who's Who in America."

Wardlaw was married in 1940 to the late Jane Williamson Wardlaw; they have four children. In 1970 he married Rosemary Leonard Boynton of Junction City, Kan.

Atomic energy program set for Dallas HS

Dallas area high school students will have opportunity this term to see the numerous ways atomic energy can help people.

A program titled "This Atomic World" will appear at 22 schools in the Dallas area.

St. Mark's School viewed the demonstration lecture Thursday. It will also be presented in Fort Worth and surrounding cities during the spring semester.

The program will appear in 91 North Central Texas schools this semester.

The 40-minute program is sponsored by TAMU's College of Engineering. Conducted by Orlan L. Ihms, it acquaints students with basic principles and sources of nuclear energy and its role in agriculture, industry, medicine and research.

Using student terms, Ihms will explain structure of atoms, how nuclear reactors operate and concepts such as radiation, fission and fusion.

He will employ special equipment to show sources of radiation and how nuclear energy is harnessed to generate electricity. Use of radioisotopes for life process studies and disease diagnosis and treatment will also be depicted.

In separate presentations to science classes, Ihms will go into extra detail on atomic structure, radioactivity, radiation biology and nuclear science careers.
