Lobbyists besiege revision convention

AUSTIN (AP) — More than 80 lobbyists are sticking close to the Texas Constitutional Convention, ready to advocate causes ranging from sexual privacy to highway construction.

Cinema shows seven flicks in festival

The Aggie Cinema will present a four day Clint Eastwood festival this week featuring seven films. Two movies will be shown each evening beginning Thursday.

The first show will begin at 7 p. m. in the University Center Theater and the second at 8:45. Admission is one dollar.

Eastwood plays the "man with no name" in the Italian westerns, "A Fistful of Dollars" and "For a Few Dollars More" on Thursday.

Friday's movies are "The Beguiled" in which Eastwood plays a Union soldier captured by the girls of a small southern town and "Joe Kidd," a tale of the Mexican border range wars.

"Play Misty for Me," Saturday's first feature, is a suspenseful film about a disc jockey and a beautiful basket case. This is followed by "Two Mules for Sister Sara," a tale of a cowboy and a nun running amuck during the Mexican Revolution.

Sunday there will be a repeat of "Play Misty for Me" followed by "Kelly's Heroes," the story of an American tank that slips behind German lines in World War II to rob a bank.

matters on which he expects to communicate directly" with legislators or other officials.

But many wrote on their registration forms such ambiguous phrases as "constitutional revision" or "revising the constitution in the interest of the people."

It sometimes is impossible to tell even if a lobbyist is working the convention or has merely registered to cover himself in case he decides to call on a legislator-delegate or member of the executive branch.

Daniel asked Atty. Gen. John Hill for a legal opinion on whether such uninformative statements violated the "specific description" requirement.

Lobby pressure in the convention has been minimal so far, largely because of uncertainty as to how far the lobby control law and the penal code will let them go in entertaining the legislator-delegates.

But that does not mean there is a shortage of people to speak out for special interest viewpoints or for the public good as visualized by certain organizations.

Stakes are particularly high for two groups—organized labor and those who profit from highway construction.

Individual unions and the Texas AFL-CIO have 27 registered lobbyists, most of them officials who are doing double duty.

Two organizations who oppose the use of gasoline and other motor fuel taxes for anything besides highway construction have a total of 11 lobbyists — the Texas Motor Transportation Association with eight and the Texas Good Roads Association with three.

Motor transport lobbyists, headed by veterans Terry Townsend and Jack Bryan, said their goal was "retention of the highway trust fund and retention of the railroad commission a

stitutionally elected office

TGRA lobbyists Willie Glenn Green and Eugene stated they will work for tutional highway financing, meaning continued earnings of 75 per cent of motor fuel for highway construction.

John Duncan, the Texas Liberties Union's lobbyist, stated the organization's long statement that includes rights, equal educational tunity and a prohibition "any law which infringe the right to sexual privacy between consenting adults"

Karate spotlights martial arts show

Prospective students of the martial arts will have a chance for first-hand demonstrations and information on two styles of karate this week.

The Texas A&M Tae Kwon Do Karate Club will offer demonstrations by national competitors who serve as instructors in the club Monday through Thursday in Room 257 of G. Rollie White Coliseum.

Scheduled for 6:30 p. m. daily, the demonstration sessions will feature Steve Powell, first degree black belt, and Jim Shiner and Charles Senning, both brown belts. Powell holds numerous state and national honors and offices, and Senning and Shiner have both placed in national karate competitions.

Tae Kwon Do, according to Powell, is a form of karate perfected and practiced in Korea. The other karate style "in residence" at TAMU is Isshinryu a form of karate practiced in the Ryukyus Islands, or Okinawa.

The Isshinryu Karate Club holds two demonstrations this week—Tuesday and Thursday at 7:30 p. m.—in Room 261 of G. Rollie White Coliseum.

Club spokesman Bob Phillips, black belt holder, said the demonstration will feature several matches between experienced club members, and questions from visitors will be answered.

Foreign delegates attend symposium

More than a hundred livestockmen from South and Central America and Mexico registered Monday for the Latin-American Animal Agriculture Symposium, opening activity for Texas' first Animal Agriculture Conference here.

The Conference will continue through Wednesday afternoon at the J. Earl Rudder Center. Concluding the educational session will be a livestock and grass tour for Latin American visitors to the Houston area Thursday.

Delegates for the Latin American Symposium signed in from many points in Mexico, and from Guatemala, British Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Jamaica, San Salvador, Puerto Rico, Colombia, Venezuela and Peru.

Tuesday's Conference program featured a general session at 9 a. m., when President Jack K. Williams welcomed conference participants, and a talk by Dr. L. S. "Bill" Pope, associate dean in the College of Agriculture, on "New Horizons for Texas Animal Agriculture."

Separate short courses will then convene in beef cattle, dairy production, horses, swine, and forages and pastures. Dr. John A. Hopkins, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology, will address the Wednesday general session at 8:30 a. m. on "The World Agriculture Outlook."

Monday's Latin-American Symposium was sponsored by the Animal Science Department in cooperation with the Office for International Programs. Talks were presented in Spanish or simultaneously translated into Spanish.

Six speakers were featured Monday morning, including Dr. G. E. Joandet, a visiting professor in the Animal Science Department; Dr. T. C. Cartwright, animal science professor; Jim Simpson, research associate in the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology; Dr. Don Farris, professor in the same department; Ernesto DeLeon of Pharr, livestock marketing specialist with the Texas Department of Agriculture; and John R. Beverly, animal reproduction specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

The Monday afternoon session, sponsored by the Institute of Tropical Veterinary Medicine featured four speakers and a tour of the Veterinary Large Animal Clinic and the Institute. Speakers were Dr. F. D. Maurer, associate dean for research and director of the Institute in the College of Veterinary Medicine; Dr. James Armstrong, Extension veterinarian; Dr. L. Garry Adams, associate professor in the Institute; and Dr. R. A. Todorovic, associate professor in microbiology in the Institute.

Some 34 commercial exhibits are on display at the Rudder Center, depicting various phases of the livestock industry. John R. Beverly is exhibits chairman.

Other committeemen for the Conference are Dr. Dennis Herd, beef cattle; Dr. Gary D. Potter, horse production; Dr. W. B. Thomas, swine; A. M. Meekma, dairy production; and Dr. J. N. Pratt, pasture and forage, all specialists with the Extension Service. Dr. O. D. Butler, head of the Animal Science Department, is advisor.

The Animal Agriculture Conference is sponsored by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service and the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, in cooperation with the Animal Science and Soil and Crop Sciences Departments and the Institute of Tropical Veterinary Medicine of the Texas A&M University System.
