

Henley trial delayed; Venue change possible

HOUSTON (AP) — Prosecution lawyers will call what they term "10 average citizens" to testify today in an attempt to prove that the trial of Elmer Wayne Henley, 17, should be moved to another city.

Henley is charged in six of the 27 deaths of teen-agers killed here over a three-year period in what police said was a homosexual murder-torture ring.

Don Lambright, an assistant district attorney, said, "We plan to use people as witnesses who don't have any connection with law enforcement agencies or the news media . . . just the average citizen who is the type of person who would make up a jury."

District Court Judge William Hatten said Tuesday in a pre-trial hearing he had no choice but to delay Henley's trial after lawyers for both the state and defense entered into a stipulation that the defendant could not get a fair trial anywhere in the Houston area now because of publicity.

"With this stipulation, the court has no alternative," the judge said.

Lambright told Judge Hatten he should go ahead and order a change of venue. "There is no logical reason to believe a fair trial can be obtained . . . 12 months from now," he said.

After an hour's testimony Tuesday, Judge Hatten also dismissed a defense motion to throw the whole case out of court because of prejudicial publicity allegedly generated by police.

George Flynn, a reporter for the Houston Post, the first witness, was asked by Gray where the Post obtained a statement by David Owen Brooks, 18, another defendant in the case. The statement, widely published here, accused Henley of complicity in the slayings.

Lambright objected that the reporter's source was not material to the trial and Judge Hatten agreed. The judge also cut off similar questions put to Lt. Breck Porter of the Houston police.

Rotary Club offers award to go abroad

After Tuesday's hearing, Gray

said he plans to subpoena the files of major newspapers in all Texas metropolitan areas to show there has been so much publicity "we don't believe the defendant can get a fair trial anywhere in Texas right now."

'Father' wants out of crisis

By MARK WEAVER
Staff Writer

Dr. Edward Teller, onetime "Father of the H-Bomb," cut to the meat of the energy crisis Tuesday night.

"There is too much talk on who is to be blamed for the energy crisis," Teller said. "I just want to find how to get out of it."

Speaking on technological solutions to the energy crisis, Teller said, "Energy, environment and economics are the factors that must balance. Overemphasis on any of these will lead to other worldwide problems."

Teller spoke to a polite capacity audience in Room 701 of the Rudder Tower.

Speaking with a heavy European accent Teller said that regulation is not the solution. He said that a lack of research is what hurts development in all areas.

"Because young people today are opposed to technology they are turning America into an underdeveloped country," Teller said. "Since 1945 there has been a move against technology, leaving technological fields bare."

Teller said that more deep drilling in the ocean is needed but the cost is too high. Oil spills are also a big problem, but only because of a lack of technology, he said.

"There is a bacteria that eats oil, and they could be cultured and then dropped on oil spills," Teller said. "The problem again is a lack of technology."

Goal is the most immediate available fuel at the moment," Teller said. There is much more in the U. S. than oil, but methods must be researched get increased development, said.

Again, research must be applied to produce better reactors and cheaper methods of uranium, Teller said. "Money necessary, but without brains, technology can never prove and develop," he said.
