

Student services under process of reorganization

By WILL ANDERSON
Staff Writer

A reorganization of student related offices and positions is underway, says Dr. John T. Koldus, vice president for student services.

Koldus, who assumed his position last August, said, "From my perception, there is a need for reorganizing to provide a centralization of responsibilities and a consolidation of services. The present structure is time consuming and inefficient."

This structure evolved, said Koldus, in response to the tremendous growth of the university in recent years. Adjustments and additions were made in a patchwork basis in answer to an immediate and specific problem.

"Problems that should receive my attention are often slowed in a maze of communication," Koldus said. "Many matters received by upper offices could be dealt with on a lower level."

The main advantages of the reorganization Koldus plans are the grouping of similar services and the directness of the lines of communication.

"My office and its affiliates, the student government and the faculty advisory committee, are linked directly to the university police, the health center, the corps commandant and the proposed dean of student affairs and dean of student activities."

These offices, said Koldus, are in turn linked to the activities they concern. "There are additions still in consideration but the system should be completely reorganized by the fall semester. We'll use an adapted system until then."

"A&M has gone through some growing pains," said Dr. Charles Powell, dean of student affairs. "Once all we had was the Corps. When it split, housing was split also. As the school grew housing was divided between different offices."

Powell said Koldus was hired last summer with the purpose of reorganizing the student services structure. "The new organization places housing under one office and eliminates a lot of the confusion between different living areas."

Previously A&M had only one band," said Howard Perry, dean of student activities. "Now the university is getting stage and symphonic bands. All three will be under my office to avoid conflict. Activities that were scattered before are now grouped."

Little change was indicated for the Corps, the health center and the campus police department.

The Corps had operated through Dr. Powell, said Col. Thomas R. Parsons, commandant of the Corps. "Though the lines of communications have been shortened the structure of the Corps remains basically unchanged. Dr. Powell was very cooperative and Dr. Koldus understands the Corps and its purposes so there should be little difference."

"There has always been a lot of cooperation with our requests and decisions," said Dr. W. H. Powe, director of the university health center, "so the hospital won't be greatly affected by the change."

Chief O. L. Luther, head of the university police, said the department would function as it ever has. "There are not many problems now and the new system will hopefully eliminate them."
