Solzhenitsyn

Tuesday's action could be the first step toward a trial for "anti-Soviet slander." Or he could be released soon in hopes his detention would serve as a warning to stop making statements to Western newsmen.

The maximum sentence for anti-Soviet slander is seven years in a labor camp and five additional years in Siberian exile. If he is to be tried, the author could be held for investigation for up to nine months.

There was no official confirmation of the arrest.

A labor camp victim under Stalin, later rehabilitated, Solzhenitsyn based his latest book on his own experience and conversations with fellow inmates in the Stalinist camps.

Solzhenitsyn, rated in the West as Russia's greatest living writer, has been expelled from the Soviet Writers' Union on grounds that he presents a gloomy, critical picture of Soviet life. He has been denied all the normal writer's privileges, including a residence permit for Moscow. But his wife has her apartment there and he usually stays with her.

Only one of his novels has been published in the Soviet Union. "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich." And that appeared only in a magazine and is no longer available. His later works, "Cancer Ward," "The First Circle" and "August 1914," were acclaimed in the West but never published at home.

with the highway fund resolution. When he was recognized to speak on the topic, point of order was called and much debate took place as a result. It was finally decided by a show of hands vote that he should be allowed to speak.

The resolution was tabled after more debate.

A first reading was presented on a resolution asking for review of the pet policy at the University Married Student Apartments.

In a hurry to leave, the Senate adjourned before the sponsors of the resolution could explain the problems involved.
