Townhouse" and run by former White House aide Jack A. Gleason.

The Washington Star-News said the operation was run from within the White House by then chief of staff H. R. Haldeman.

Ruff said Kalmbach "gave reports to White House staff members and a former staff member," without identifying them by name. The $3.9 million, he told Chief U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica, "was distributed to various candidates selected by members of the committee in consultation with members of the White House staff."

Ruff also said that in the summer of 1970, one individual contributed $1,150,000 which Kalmbach turned over to the committee.

The person was not identified, but the Star-News said he apparently was John J. Mulcahy, the head of a subsidiary of Pfizer Laboratories, whose contribution of $599,000 is on the public record.

The second charge against Kalmbach, a misdemeanor carrying a maximum one-year prison sentence and $1,000 fine is that he promised "an appointment as United States Ambassador to a European country" to J. Fife Symington Jr., in return for a $100,000 contribution.

Symington, now 63, was ambassador to Trinidad and Tobago from August 1969 through November 1971. He is the former president of a hardware and building supply firm in Lutherville, Md. and a first cousin of Missouri Sen. Stuart Symington, a Democrat.

Booth said the real basis for apathy was powerlessness in the post-Watergate era.

"If NSL is going to work, it is going to do so because of a majority interest," said Booth. "The people we are up against spend their full time trying to stop organizations like NSL from forming."

Humphrey said he did not agree there was a lot of apathy among students.

Humphrey noted that students had refused to accept continued involvement in Vietnam and had also refused to accept environmental germs.

Woodward said students should be involved in government and lobby for impeachment of President Nixon if that is what he wanted to see done.

Delegates will lobby with their respective senators and representatives on Capitol Hill Tuesday and Wednesday, presenting them with both national and student issues.
