

Doctor's Door

CLAUDE GOSWICK, MD, University Health Center, answers students questions.

Q. What are the effects of prolonged lack of sleep?

A. Sleep is absolutely essential; and, of the conditions making for human efficiency, it is one of the most important.

Human experimental subjects have been deprived of sleep for more than 200 hours. On simple tests, the subjects did fairly well. But on tests requiring longer attention span they became slow and inaccurate. They were unable to shift attention from one test to another. Symptoms are: burning eyes, headaches, nervousness, emotional instability (irritability or silliness), loss of motor power and coordination, slurred speech, and even visual hallucinations.

Although most students will never approach these extremes, the symptoms must be familiar to a certain extent to almost everyone.

Q. What is the Rh factor and why is it important in pregnancies?

A. The Rh factor is the most complex of several human blood group systems. Females who lack this factor (Rh negative) may become immunized (develop antibodies) when, during pregnancy, the blood of a fetus enters their systems. In turn, the mother's blood may destroy (hemolyze) the blood of the fetus.

This factor can be a problem with the first pregnancy, but it is usually with succeeding pregnancies that serious results may be seen.

This condition in infants is called erythroblastosis fetalis and it treated virtually by completely exchanging the infant's blood. The health of the mother is not affected by the Rh factor or the lack of it.

Q. Is amnesia truth or a myth? A. The term amnesia means loss of ability to form memories despite an alert state of mind. Two types of amnesia are seen occasionally: that which follows a concussion and that associated with hysteria.

Post-concussion amnesia is short-lived (a matter of minutes or hours), and hysterical amnesia may last several days. Post-concussion amnesia is self diminishing, while hysterical amnesia may be treated with psychotherapy or hypnosis.

Neither of these is permanent, so permanent amnesia is largely a myth.

However, memories may be permanently lost if brain cells themselves are damaged, as in an auto accident, or during surgery.

Campus Briefs

Aide positions open

Getting involved in campus activity as a sophomore is sometimes overlooked as a possibility. The Memorial Student Center offers special positions open solely to next year's sophomores. Vice-presidential aides, as these people are called, will be vitally involved with public relations, finance, program coordination, communication and information flow. These selected sophomores will also deal with new programs office arrangement, the upcoming American College Union-International Convention in the fall, and other administrative duties.

Application for these positions will close Friday at 5 p.m. with interviews conducted the Monday and Tuesday after Spring Break.

RA applications sought

Applications for Resident Advisors for the Keathley, Fowler, Hughes area are now available.

All women who are presently enrolled at A&M and have an over-all grade point of 2.0, can apply for the job. Applications are available at Sue Hodge's Office, A-2 Lounge. These must be returned by March 8. Interviews will be held after spring break.

Free University

Free University's Comparative Religions course will have a guest speaker tonight at 7:30 in Room 127 of the Academic Building.

The speaker is from Houston

Statistics programming

A seminar on statistical programs will be conducted Wednesday and Thursday from 4 to 5 p.m. in Room 104 of the O. E. Teague Building.

The seminar will be conducted by Brad Lisenbe, systems analyst, and will speak on the Eastern Orthodox.

Free University has also announced that there will be no classes during spring break.

Those who wish to attend should contact Lisenbe at 845-4211 or at Room 105X of the Teague Building.

Marine programs

A team from the Marine Corps' Officer Selection Office in Austin will be on campus this week to explain the service's Platoon Leaders Class (PLC) and Officers Candidate Course (OCC) commissioning programs to interested students.

The group, headed by Capt. W. E. Lucas, will operate an information booth in the Memorial Student Center from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. daily through Thursday.
