

Identification, punishment part of streaker strategy

By CLIFF LEWIS
Thursday night an angry crowd of students migrated from the police station to President Jack Williams' house demanding to know what would happen to any streakers apprehended during the night.

"No one was supposed to be apprehended," said John J. Koldus, assistant vice president for student services. Many uniformed and plainclothed policemen as well as university officials were on the scene of the "streak-in" for the purpose of identifying streakers only, said Koldus. Those that were identified will be placed on conduct probation in a position explained by Koldus' statement elsewhere on page 1.

Charles Powell, dean of men, described the situation in detail. "I was too optimistic to think the streak-in would happen, but when the crowd gathered, I knew it would. When a crowd gathers, reason goes out the window and I sit on the edge of my seat. In crowd control, there can be no quick reactions to set anything off, and we can't grab or challenge anyone. We had, around the perimeter of the crowd, people to identify any streakers, if possible."

University Police O. L. Luther had two photographers on the scene who took four or five pictures of the streakers, according to Cliff Walstein, head of the Photographic and Visual Aids Laboratory.

"But that method of identification wasn't too successful," said Luther.

One incident occurred during the night that Koldus referred to as a "fluke." He said that "a streaker on a bicycle fell off his bike, knocking a policeman to the ground. He landed literally in the policeman's arms."

Powell said of the incident, "We weren't out to catch him, but once you've got him, what do you do with him? He didn't have any identification on him, of course; so he was brought to the police station, identified, and released."

Although at least 12 other streakers have been identified to date, said Powell, he knows of no others that were apprehended that night.

Three others were apprehended, according to Luther. "A couple were brought in by Ron Blachley's boys," he said.

A man in shorts was "grabbed" out of the crowd in front of the police station by "a man in a white shirt," stated a student in a letter to the editor of the Batt March 29. He resisted and was taken inside in a necklock, the letter said. Two Battalion reporters saw the man taken into the police station.

The arresting officer's name was John St. Claire. He said that he recognized the person as having been a streaker earlier, "and he wasn't about to come with me."

St. Claire said that it was decided in a meeting at 9 that night that it would be useful to apprehend streakers for identification, as long as the police did not go into a crowd to get them. His lieutenant and other higher officials attended that meeting, he said.

Neither Koldus, Powell, nor Ron Blachley, Powell's assistant, said they knew of any meeting where it was decided that anyone should be apprehended.

The streakers identified are being punished, Dean Powell said, because streaking causes problems such as those seen in the mob that night. Many people were injured by the rapid movements of the crowd, he said, and also the university's image is being hurt.

"We can't pick out which laws to ignore and which to enforce," he said. "Many of us aren't personally offended by streaking and many of the students are just having fun. But it's hard for them to see both sides of the fence, because they've never been on this side of the fence."
