New dean concerned with women's rights

By JUDY BAGGETT
Dr. Diane W. Strommer, recently named associate dean for student affairs in the College of Liberal Arts, is a woman of varied talents and interests.
The associate dean graduated from the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, with a B.A. She received the M.A. in English and Ph.D. in Renaissance drama from Ohio State University.
In North Carolina, Dr. Strommer developed a radio program directed toward women. "I tried to get away from household and cooking hints," she said. Her format included topics such as career women and women and the law. The program won the North Carolina Broadcaster's Award of Excellence.
Dr. Strommer actively participated in Boston in the National Organization for Women, a conservative women's lib organization. She was involved in the academic task force concerned with equal employment opportunities for women in higher education. Dr. Strommer sees no conflict of roles when a woman works and is married. "Women should fulfill their potential and live their lives as they wish to without a predetermined role set for them," she said. "My concern is that people, male and female, are able to be what they are most comfortable with."

The new addition to the faculty wrote a book on politics and language, but she plans extensive revision during the next year due to recent changes in the field.
Dr. Strommer is interested in adoption and adoptive procedures. She and her husband have two adopted pre-school age children, a boy and a Korean girl.

In her spare time, the associate dean enjoys reading, cooking, sewing and swimming. She plans to resume riding horses now that she is in a more rural setting. "My children occupy a good part of my spare time," she said.
Along with her duties as associate dean, Dr. Strommer will teach English 203 in the fall. "I feel it is too premature to talk about changes or new programs," she said. "My concern primarily has been to fully understand what has been done. I think one first has to know what is, before he can start talking about what may be."
"I felt a sense of optimism at A&M which is missing in a lot of universities," Dr. Strommer said.
Since she most recently held a position at an urban university, she was impressed with the quietness and openness of the campus. Because she knew A&M was an old establishment, Dr. Strommer commented that she was surprised at the newness of the buildings.
Dr. Strommer has taught in a variety of institutions including a boy's military school, a women's college and a large city university.

This man is special.
