

Keep team in shape

Trainers, managers ready Aggs

By TONY GALLUCCI
Billy Pickard, with a team of 17 managers and trainers, is responsible for all the needs and pains of TAMU's athletes.

As head trainer and equipment manager, Pickard does out duties to two senior trainers, two senior managers and their crews. According to Pickard, the main function of a trainer is "the prevention of injury rather than treatment. Everything you do before a practice or game would add to prevention, but treatment is a big part of the job."

Trainers are assigned the duty of taping the athletes. Tape is used at the rate of 1800 yards per practice session.

Also charged with on-field relief are the trainers. They make ice, cold towels and salt tablets available throughout practice.

They also pass out an electrolyte drink during the team's three work-out breaks.

As for equipment, the managers have a more lengthy schedule. They must arrive about two hours before practice and four hours before a game to ready the facilities.

Fitting pads and issuing equipment is the pre-workout menu while chasing balls is the chore during practice. After practice, the managers collect the store equipment, keeping it in good repair.

Problems are common, but the nemesis seems to be astroturf shoes. "They wear out so fast, especially in the rain," Pickard said. "We issued eight or ten new pair of shoes Monday."

TAMU's senior trainers are Mike Griffin and Jimmy Cox. Along with senior managers Al Alexander and Paul Baker, Griffin and Cox oversee their underclass counterparts. Pickard insists that the group under him work together as a team. "We can't have too many bosses," he said. The student managers and trainers have been described as "high school athletes who for one reason or another can't compete at the college level and just want to stay close to the sport." There were about 75 applicants for this year's positions by December of 1973.

Trainers usually have a desire to become licensed and are usually a P.E. or pre-med major. Managers are generally hard workers who are enrolled in just about anything except majors requiring long study hours or labs.

Pickard says the university facilities are super with the exception of the dressing room. "The dressing room is adequate but it is the worst of our facilities," said Pickard. The room was built in 1948 with a squad of 60 in mind. Pickard now oversees a team of 120.

But Pickard does consider the understadium training room a great convenience for therapeutic reasons. Injuries can be treated promptly when necessary.

"Right now," says Pickard, "we're more interested in that scoreboard and putting more points on the left side than the right."

BILLY PICKARD, team trainer for the Aggies, goes about his daily chores wrapping knees and ankles.

Chicken fried steak like you wouldn't believe.

The 3-C Corral serves a chicken fried steak like you wouldn't believe. We start with 1/3 pound of round steak — without a speck of "extender." We double dip each steak in our own batter, fry it to a golden brown and deliver it to your table hot and ready to eat. The chicken fried plate also includes a generous serving of french fries, fresh green salad and a roll. And the price is about the same you've been paying for a pre-breaded steak: $1.95. If you like chicken fried steak (and nearly every Aggie does) you'll find a home at the 3-C Corral.
