Converter pollutes

Studies have confirmed that the catalytic converters on many 1975 automobiles will cause an air pollution problem of their own, an Environmental Protection Agency official said Monday.

The converters will be standard equipment on about 70 percent of the 1975 cars in order to meet federal air pollution standards.

John Moran, director of the EPA's $3.5-million study of auto emission problems, said the study confirmed that the converters will produce emissions of sulfuric acid.

Moran and his colleagues first warned of the sulfuric acid problem in November. Since then, they have been testing prototype vehicles with the new converters.

They have found the converter-equipped cars give off .05 grams of sulfuric acid per mile in a fine mist from the exhaust systems, while cars without converters give off no sulfuric acid, Moran said in an interview.

He said the sulfuric acid emissions could develop into a health hazard in two years. The problem will affect people with existing respiratory ailments who breathe in areas which have many vehicles.

He noted the EPA does not require the converters. It has, however, forced auto manufacturers to build cars that meet air quality standards passed by Congress in 1970.

Legislator wins access to UT files

The University of Texas must give a legislator access to files on UT land leases, but may keep confidential land appraisals and sealed bid contents, Atty. Gen. John Hill held.

In other recent opinions, Hill concluded:

- Records of a city's exercise of licensing authority over electrical installations is public information and should be disclosed.
- Police supplementary reports of accidents, including witnesses' statements and photographs, although involving possible litigation against a city, are part of the official record and are not excepted from disclosure.
- A faculty member who fails to exercise the option to participate in the optional teacher retirement system does not have the right to a second opportunity to exercise that option on returning to teaching in Texas after terminating previous employment and leaving the state to seek an advanced degree.
- Whether a water pump and irrigation casing are fixtures within terms of taxation depends on facts in a particular case.
