Program benefit grad students

Two new programs are benefiting graduate students in the College of

The Graduate Student Liaison Group is composed of one student representative from each department in the college. Individual members or the group may take their ideas on graduate instruction matters to the dean or the Curriculum and Graduate Instruction Committee.

The second program represents an attempt to improve scientific communications between students of the various department. Part of the program will consist of informal meetings each month featuring guest speakers and a free exchange of information. The program hopes to establish a speaker series of nationally known scientists speaking on topics of multi-disciplinary interest.

Racket Sports entangle Intramural participants

Racket play began this week in the Intramural arena

Tennis and badminton again demonstrated the growth the Intramural program is experiencing. Both sports have increased the number of participants by 25-45 per cent.

The games are played on the University tennis courts from 5-7 p.m., Monday through Thursday. The courts are closed to nonintramural play during these hours.

Badminton is played in the Coliseum Annexes at 6 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

These two games are played both as singles and doubles events. Both approach the object of the game simularly, that is getting some object over the net by hitting it with a racket, but the simularity ends there.

Badminton is considered a fairly nonstrenuous game, although it does consist of some running around. The court is smaller than the tennis court and the force of play is much reduced by the use of the birdie. The arm action is different in that the badminton net is off the ground, hung like a volleyball net. Tennis is considered one of the "jet-set" sports, but is rapidly becoming one of the major individual sports of the world. Americans are re-discovering the excitement of the game through personal experience.

The game requires a great deal of running, and constant movement with a strain put on the player's arms in combat with the ball.

Both games at A&M are offered in the Health and Physical Education Department and most of this year's players in badminton especially are playing their first competition. The number of participants is greater, but there's room for more people who just want to get out of the Academic world for a while and do something fun to improve their health.

Watch & Enter Volleyists, Swimmers Get Into Intramural Act

Next week is the individuals day with chance to shine in the Intramural field as swimming, and field goal kicking begin competition.

Swimming scheduled to last four nights, Monday and Tuesday of next week and the following Monday and Tuesday, will be held in the natatorium. Last year, Kruegar took women's, Sq.9 took Military, C2 took Fish, and the All-University Champ was White Hall.

The field goal kicking pre-liminaries will be on field ETV, located behind Kyle Field within the fence, at 5:15 p.m. Thursday. Last year's kick-off during the All-University Championship Game gave the crown to Mitch Barker.
