

Board hears cases and trial procedures

Student Government Judicial Board strived to formalize hearing procedures Sunday.

The board discussed having a time limit for the summation of a case. A summation is the final summing up of a case before the final decision is made.

"Summations have taken a huge bulk of the trial," Michael Perrin, senior member, said.

"If they think it's relevant, it's our responsibility to listen," said Sam Walsler, graduate board member, opposing a time limit.

A time limit would not be enforced while evidence was being given.

Designating attorneys to the board was another formalizing possibility discussed. The rule would eliminate people other than attorneys arguing for the case.

Standard procedures for motions such as delay and recess will be set and put in written form. The procedures will be given to the attorneys at the beginning of the hearing.

Creating a grand jury was proposed by Perrin because there has been "a problem with the flow of information."

Members of the proposed jury would be randomly drawn from the student body to assure the absence of internal politics.

Some members of the board said a grand jury would slow processes. Since the judicial board will deal with election cases, they pointed out, the time element could affect the outcome of the election. The delay caused by a grand jury, however, would allow the defendant more time for preparation.

If a member of the board is personally involved in a case, he will announce that he is involved and leave. The quorum will stand if a member leaves for a valid reason. A quorum, the minimum number of members required to be present for the board to transact business, is presently seven members.

To initiate an appeal, a student has to file a petition in the Judicial Board Appeal Box located in the Student Government Office.

The petition should contain names of the plaintiff, defendant and time, location and date of the violation.

Tickets, fees, budget concern student finance VP

"Personally, I feel if a guy gets caught the first time it may dawn on him that he can't park illegally and get away with it," said Curt Marsh student vice president of finance.

Marsh discussed parking tickets, student service fee allocations, building use fees and budget priorities in a "Battalion" interview Wednesday.

He said in the past the across-the-board $5 fine for parking violations had been excessive.

His resolution making the fine for a first offense $2, passed by a voice vote at last Wednesday's Senate meeting.

Calling the senate's relationship with the administration decent, Marsh said he tries to keep up with administration action on various fees and acknowledged there have been some misunderstandings.

One he cited was the interest on student service fees. About $535,000 in student services fees flows throughout the year into an account administered by the State Controller, said Marsh.

He said the account is specifically for student-oriented expenses. The administration has been putting the higher than 5% interest of several thousand dollars into an auxiliary services account, according to him.

Money in the auxiliary services account can be used to pay for almost anything in the university, said Marsh.

Marsh said the interest as well as the fees themselves should be placed in the state account for student oriented activities.

President Jack K. Williams' action in putting $1,200 of the interest back into the state account was tokenism, said Marsh.

He said the senate had been discussing the issue with the administration.

Howard Vestal, assistant vice president for business affairs, explained that the $535,000 in student service fees last year was allocated immediately and earned no interest.

Only the surplus was put into a time deposit account, earning the interest of $1,200 which was put back into the student services account, said Vestal.

There is no surplus this year since all the student service fees have been allocated and no interest is now being earned, Vestal said.

The Finance Office informed Marsh that next semester the Board of Directors may raise the building use fee from $3.50 to $6.

Marsh said the $2.50 increase is necessary to help finance $25 million in 20-30 year bonds for east campus construction. The interest on the bonds is 8-9% annually.

The university can finance the bonds with loans up to six and three-fourths of the permanent university fund. The rest has to be matched by building use fees, he said.

The permanent university fund was established in 1876 to create a first-class university. It consists primarily of revenue from 2.1 million acres in West Texas.

Oil was discovered on the land in the 1920's and the revenue is about $35 million a year. The University of Texas receives two-thirds and TAMU one-third.

Commenting on the increase in building use fees, Marsh said, "That's the way it has to go. We at least know what's going on."

"I'm surprised how open the Finance Office has been with us."

Marsh said the interest as well as the fees themselves should be placed in the state account for student oriented activities.

President Jack K. Williams' action in putting $1,200 of the interest back into the state account was tokenism, said Marsh.

He said the senate had been discussing the issue with the administration.

Howard Vestal, assistant vice president for business affairs, explained that the $535,000 in student service fees last year was allocated immediately and earned no interest.

Only the surplus was put into a time deposit account, earning the interest of $1,200 which was put back into the student services account, said Vestal.

There is no surplus this year since

Whether we agree or not is irrelevant. At least they tell us."

Marsh said he considered student government's purpose to be representing students and serving their needs.

"We can't claim we're doing a perfect job. We may have our biases. But we do the best we can and air the issues," he said.

The biggest increases in the senate budget reflect a higher priority this year on academic and external affairs, said Marsh.

He said a lot of effort is being put into getting published evaluations. The $15,000 allocated for academic affairs may not all be spent.

The senate has a higher level of communication now with NSL and NSA and is using some of their resources not tapped before, said Marsh.

For travel to conventions and conferences, the senate has allocated $1200 this year.

According to Marsh, the senate hired a full time secretary because increased involvement in external affairs meant more correspondence and a heavier work load.

Marsh emphasized that the budget may not completely reflect all the senate's priorities, saying, "We can do a lot of talking with the administration without spending money."

Calling himself an economics buff, Marsh is a senior marketing major with an economics minor. He has been involved in Great Issues and Rules and Regulations. He also helped rewrite the Aggie Honor Code.
