

Egypt, Russia trying to get it together again

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—Like estranged lovers, Egypt and the Soviet Union are trying to make up, but the ardor of the old days will never return because the United States has entered the picture.

President Anwar Sadat's tack toward the West has produced few concrete results thus far and so he has sent a high-level delegation to the Soviet Union to seek a gesture of friendship to counteract criticism of him here and in other Arab countries.

The delegation, headed by Egyptian Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmy and including chief of staff Lt. Gen. Abdel Ghany Gamasy, hopes to turn a new page in relations and pave the way for a visit to Cairo early next year by Soviet Communist party leader Leonid Brezhnev.

The presence of Gamasy and Egypt's war production minister, Ahmed Kamal, in the delegation indicate the Egyptians will try to secure a resumption of Soviet arms shipments, including sophisticated equipment supplied to other Arab states but not Egypt.

According to diplomatic sources, Egypt's military chiefs were the first to express disappointment to Sadat over the apparent failure of American diplomacy to produce results and to urge him to mend his bridges with Moscow.

"The generals saw their stocks going down, the Russians sending tons of equipment to Syria and no apparent falloff in U. S. military supplies to Israel so they started going sour on Sadat's policy," one source explained.

They reportedly argued there was little to show for nine months of American diplomacy.

On the diplomatic side, Fahmy told an audience Sunday he was going to Moscow to develop relations in a "positive way" so a summit can be arranged between Sadat and Brezhnev.

But he may find the going rough. The Arabs apparently have agreed, after Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's latest swing through the area, not to seek an immediate resumption of the Geneva peace talks but rely on interim negotiations.

The Soviet Union, cosponsor of the Geneva talks with Washington, wanted the session resumed early and may not find Fahmy's explanation for a further delay convincing, diplomatic sources said.

But the Brezhnev-Sadat summit in Cairo appears near certain. East European sources say it will take place in January.

If the current meeting is successful, the pressure on Sadat will be relieved, but he still will have to produce something tangible from American diplomacy soon.

Besides arms and the Middle East conflict, the Soviet Union also will want to hear about Egypt's efforts to liberalize its tightly socialist economy, another move in the past nine months that sent shock waves through the Kremlin.

Having built the Egypt's huge Aswan high dam and a steel plant at Helwan, the Soviet Union has a considerable stake in Egypt's economy and its public sector industries. The idea of this hold being threatened by Western and Japanese businessmen is not appealing.

Strategy for peace supported

RABAT, Morocco (AP)—Henry Kissinger headed home Tuesday with assurances from several key Arab leaders that they will back his Middle East peace strategy and try to stave off another hike in oil prices.

The latest to give such support was Houari Boumediene, the president of Algeria and one of the most influential and radical Arab leaders, U.S. officials reported. Earlier assurances came from Egypt's President Anwar Sadat and King Faisal of Saudi Arabia.

After a three-hour meeting with Boumediene on Monday night, Kissinger reported, "I told him of some of the positive trends I have found. His advice was very helpful and his attitude very understanding."

U.S. officials consider the fiery Algerian president's support a major development in the American effort to arrange talks between Israel and two of its moderate Arab neighbors, Egypt and Jordan.

Boumediene's conciliatory attitude on oil prices, meanwhile, was said to be based on Kissinger's alarm that the quadrupled increase is having a devastating effect on third world countries.

In his week-long tour of the Middle East, the secretary of state has been stressing mostly his step-by-step approach to a settlement between Israel and the Arabs. But he has also been lobbying hard for reduced oil prices.

Boumediene's assurance on oil prices—he may even work for a reduction, it was learned—comes on the heels of a similar pledge from King Faisal of Saudi Arabia last week. Faisal is known to have sent a message to the Shah of Iran suggesting a joint effort to bar a hike when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meets in Vienna in December.

Kissinger only hinted at his success with Boumediene as he left Dar El-Beida airport in Algiers. "We discussed our differing approaches to the question of oil prices and we reviewed ways and approaches to reconcile these different points of view in the months ahead," he said.

A senior American official said he would be surprised if OPEC went ahead with an expected 5 per cent increase.

Last year, some 12,000 smokers didn't think when they were in the forest.

They dropped their lit cigarettes instead of crushing them dead out.

And so 12,000 forest fires started unnecessarily. And about 60 million trees died.

So if you smoke in the forest, put the life out of your cigarettes. No dead cigarette ever killed a tree.
