Envoy heading home

British may lack U.S. ambassador

LONDON (AP)—Walter H. Annenberg soon will be packing his multimillion-dollar collection of French Impressionist paintings, saying goodbye to Queen Elizabeth II and probably leaving the post of U. S. Ambassador to Britain empty for a while.

After 5½ years as envoy to the Court of St. James, the 66-year-old Philadelphia publisher and philanthropist, says he cannot postpone his departure any longer while the United States seeks a successor. He has projects of his own he wants to start work on.

"I hear Her Majesty is disappointed that there will be no immediate continuity," the ambassador told newsmen. "If there is nobody here to take over from me by the end of October, it is conceivable there will be no ambassador before the end of November or even December."

Annenberg said he thinks it would be difficult for a career diplomat making $42,500 a year to be ambassador and keep up Winfield House, the immense ambassadorial residence in Regent's Park.

"He could do it with help from the government," Annenberg said, "but not in my style, with the fine wines, and the flowers in every room. Running the residence probably has cost me $250,000 a year. If the government came up with $75,000 to $100,000, it could be probably handily operated, but it would be on a different basis."

Annenberg said his successor could probably borrow paintings from Britain's National Gallery to fill the empty places on the walls where his Monets, Manets and Van Goghs now hang. Annenberg is taking them to his ranch in the California desert.

Annenberg says he will continue in control of his publishing empire when he returns to the United States, but his main project will be to try to establish a school for international communications and understanding. He also has commissioned a book on the decline and fall of the West—like Gibbon's "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire."

Leaving Britain, Annenberg says he fears an end is coming to the gracious style of living, "especially the dignified way of life in the world in which ambassadors move."

"There will be a shift in the way of life for people of affluence," he said. But those who are not affluent will be better off "and that's all to the good."

Klan praise rejected by Briscoe

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas Fiery Knights of the Ku Klux Klan endorsed Gov. Dolph Briscoe for reelection Tuesday but Briscoe promptly rejected the action.

Scott Nelson, imperial wizard of the Fiery Knights, announced the endorsement of both Briscoe and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby "because both are against union agency shop proposals that would require payment of union dues even by those who have no desire to do so."

"I will not accept endorsement of any arm of the Ku Klux Klan," Briscoe said. "I do not agree with any organization which tried to pit one citizen against another in this state."

Nelson organized the Fiery Knights two years ago when he said leaders of the Klan did nothing more than do a lot of talking. The National Knights of the KKK nominated Nelson last month as their 1976 vice presidential candidates.

Nuclear power plant given partial okay

WASHINGTON (AP)—An Atomic Energy Commission board has authorized a partial construction permit to allow work to begin on a nuclear power plant near Glen Rose, Tex.

The permit, approved by the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board last Friday, covers construction on all parts of the Comanche Peak Steam Electric Station except the two proposed 1.16 million kilowatt reactors themselves, an AEC spokesman said.

He said further hearings will be held to determine whether to grant a permanent construction permit to allow the reactors to be built.

Partial construction permits allow power companies to begin work on nuclear plants—at their own financial risk—while awaiting final approval on their applications for permanent permits, a process that often takes several years.

The action by the board will allow the Texas Utilities Generating Co. to prepare the site for construction, install construction support facilities such as power poles, begin excavation for various structures and build service facilities, the spokesman said.

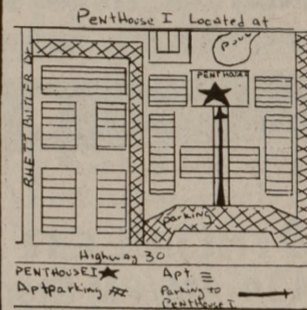

The board found that there are "suitable assurances" that the Comanche Peak site "is a suitable location for nuclear power reactors of the general size and type proposed." It said no apparent environmental or health problems would be involved in building the plant at that site.

The site is about 5 miles north of Glen Rose and about 65 miles southwest of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.
