

Ticket hassle cost of winning

Editor:
With all the present bickering over TAMU football tickets I feel it is time for me to bicker along with the rest.
First, I'm sick and tired of students griping about having to sit in the end zone or other less desirable seats because of a high demand for tickets. I sat on the 40-yard line for 4 years and watched the Aggies lose, so we should all be glad to sit anywhere we can and watch them win.

Second, the high demand for the Tech game tickets for students wasn't for students or their dates. It was for their friends and relatives back home who haven't been to Aggie games in quite a while but are now jumping on the bandwagon.

I've talked to too many students about this to know how extensive a practice it is to buy date tickets for the above-mentioned latecomers.
Third, the demand for the TCU game student tickets is almost half of Tech's, and this game is just as crucial as any other. TCU has been known to pull some tremendous upsets of nationally-ranked teams while having a less than mediocre squad itself.

Fourth, the demand for the Baylor game student tickets will be quite high, I'm sure, but everyone should remember that two years ago TAMU sent back 2,000 of its student tickets to Waco because they couldn't sell them here!

Paint urged

Editor:
So many of the people attending the games in Kyle Field are annoyed by the intense itching caused by the fiberglass seats. A possible coat or two of a durable, water-proof paint would certainly help, even if the Aggies do stand during the entire game!

What can a responsive and responsible ticket office and athletic dept. do when the students' whims to attend or not to change with every weekend?

Of course, many will say that I and my family and friends were stupid to support a loser for so many years. But, it's our university and team and we can't ever trade them in like new cars we don't like.

Be glad you're not at Ohio State where only seniors can get tickets to any home game! Winning does have a price.

Girls infringe

Editor:
The infiltration of women into almost every aspect of man's world has now taken another step.

I personally believe the women in the Corps not only do not belong there, but from what I have seen, exhibit little if any Corps pride or spirit.

The traditional freshman "whipping out" to upperclassmen when done by a woman Corps member reaches, at times, a ludicrous state and exhibits no respect behind it. I feel the male members of the Corps should be rightfully indignant to this intrusion of the female.

In my eyes this ranks next to the worst possible potential happening on this campus, the admission of women to the Aggie band.
