

Shaw satire plays tomorrow

"Don Juan in Hell" by George Bernard Shaw, will be presented Wednesday in the Bryan Civic Auditorium in cooperation with Town Hall and the Bryan Rotary Community Series.

Starring Ricardo Montalban, as Don Juan, the Community Series program will be presented at 8 p. m.

Besides Montalban, the cast consists of many nationally and internationally known actors, from both stage and screen. These include Edward Mulhare as the Devil; Myrna Loy as Dona Ana; and Kurt Kasznar.

"Don Juan" is the rarely presented third act of Shaw's monumental work "Man and Superman." It was first produced as a play in 1907.

Shaw uses Don Juan as a device to satirize post Victorian England and the future. Although the work was completed over 70 years ago, Shaw foretold and foresaw literally every sexual and social moral problem of the present.

This one-time event brings an all-star cast to Bryan-College Station that has the combined experience of all facets of entertainment, from the stage to movies to television.

Montalban, who began in the theater, has recently returned to the stage after being in movies and television. Montalban established himself as a well-polished and versatile performer in movies and television.

The Devil, in "Don Juan", is portrayed by Edward Mulhare. Mulhare starred in the Broadway production of "My Fair Lady" as Professor Higgins. After three years with "My Fair Lady" he toured Russia with the company. Television then became the Irish actor's next field of concern. He starred in "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir" television series.

Myrna Loy, playing Dona Ana, is an international award winning actrix. She received the Brussels World Film Festival Prize for best actress. Miss Loy is also very active in UNESCO and the American Association of the United Nations.

TAMU students have a special opportunity to buy tickets to the program at reduced price. Students and their dates can get tickets for $2.50. General public tickets are $5.50. Tickets may be obtained from the Rudder Center box office.

'Would like to be a moon astronaut'

By BARBARA WEST
Staff Writer

Gen. A. R. Luedecke worked in the military and government before coming into the business of education.

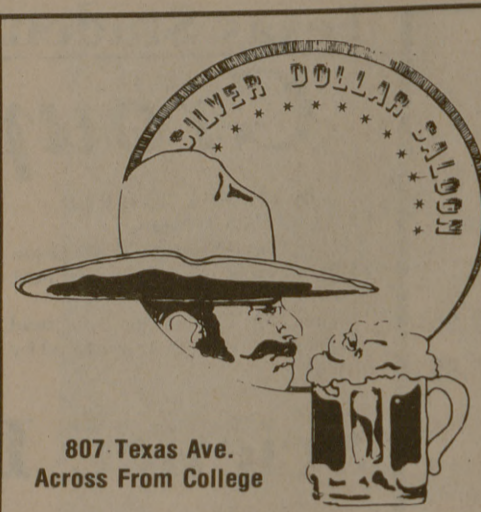

Now the university's executive vice president, Luedecke, a 1932 graduate, first returned to A&M as research coordinator in the College of Engineering. Until that time he spent 28 years in the Air Force, six with the Atomic Energy Commission in Washington and four as deputy director of the Jet Propulsion Lab at the California Institute of Technology.

"I would like to have been an astronaut on the moon flights," Luedecke said. "I would even have liked to be in a position to take one of the first trips to Mars. Of course that's still a long way in the future." It may not be as exciting as space travel, but he has all the work anyone could want in his present position.

As part of his official duties Luedecke is concerned with facilities planning and construction programs, he represents TAMU in several university associations which sponsor cooperative research projects and hears reports from four university committees. He chairs two of the committees, the Reactor Safety Board and the Long Range Campus Planning Committee.

Much of Luedecke's job involves determining needs and priorities for physical services for all campus programs and translating these needs into design, development and construction.
