

'Coeds not ready for sororities'

Few at organizational meeting

By JUDY BAGGETT

Two coeds attended an organizational meeting of Phi Mu, a social sorority, November 25.
"It looks to me, like they (coeds) are not ready (for sororities) yet," said Ann Gilbert, representative for Phi Mu.

she wanted to join the sorority because — "my mom was in it."
"It (Phi Mu) would give an outlet for girls to have fun," said Jane Matthews, sophomore.
"Other girls on campus don't think sororities would be fun."

Ruth Ann Falk, Krueger resident advisor, signed the petition against sororities because she said she didn't want a bunch of snobby people running around.
"It would ruin the friendliness on campus," Falk said.

One of the girls who organized the petition, Ardie Armstrong, said that sororities would divide the campus.
Miller said however, "Being an Aggie would always come before the sorority."

Adair said she has not seen enough evidence indicating desire to have sororities on campus.
"Until there is an overwhelming interest from a number of groups, I don't think it will be a possibility," she said.

Female psych course offered

The psyche of the female, long an object of wonderment to her mate, will come under scrutiny at TAMU during the spring semester.
Dr. Hanna Levenson of the TAMU Psychology Department will instruct a junior-level course on the psychology of the female. The course will be limited to 40 persons but is open to both sexes and has no prerequisites.
Entitled Psychology 300, the class examines theory and research relating to psychological assumptions about the female personality and will place emphasis on how these assumptions are now being questioned or verified by existing research data.
