U. S. government plans to sell gold reserves First time in more than 40 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in more than 40 years, the U.S. government plans to sell some of its official gold reserves to the general public on Jan. 6, Treasury Secretary William E. Simon said Tuesday.

Simon disclosed that the government will auction two million ounces of gold to the highest bidders at a public auction. At the official price of $42.22 an ounce, that much gold is valued at about $84 million.

But the government will probably get a much higher price, since the market price for gold has been hovering near $180 an ounce in recent weeks, more than four times the official price.

It will be difficult for the average American to participate in the Jan. 6 auction since the gold will be sold in auction since the gold will be sold in minimum quantities of 400-ounce bars which are officially valued at about $16,800 apiece and much higher at the market price. Simon said the sale of a small part of the nation's total gold reserve of 276 million ounces is connected

He said the administration will not ask Congress to postpone the gold-owning date, even though he originally had opposed the action of Congress to lift the 41-year-old gold-owning ban.

Simon's announcement of a gold sale, which will be conducted by the General Services Administration, immediately was attacked by Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Tex., as a grievous error

Simon disclosed the action before Gonzalez' House banking subcommittee on international finance.

'I'm afraid you have misjudged the situation," Gonzalez told Simon. "This will cause upheaval; it will endanger the monetary and fiscal system.

But Simon said gold no longer has any role in the nation's monetary system and argued that if the government doesn't sell its gold, then lems. Americans have not been pen had no ted to own gold, except for indavent the from the

Harmony expected of Demos

KANSAS CITY (AP) - The Democratic party opens its miniconvention here Wednesday with leaders predicting harmony but keeping their fingers crossed.

Foremost among the early arrivals was a bevy of presidential hopefuls, a leading indicator that the occasionally tumultuous Democratic conventions are once again considered safe ground for an ambitious politican.

Among those planning major ef-forts for their presidential aspirations were Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., considered the man to beat at the moment, and Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., the only formally announced candidate so far.

But others of note also will be around, including Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, who has not announced and says he won't campaign here but is still considered a contender, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who was the frontrunner before his recent withdrawal from contention.

The general sessions on the convention floor don't begin until Friday night, but the preliminaries open officially Wednesday morning.

Before it is finished next Sunday night, the 2,000-plus delegates are supposed to approve the first party charter ever adopted by a major American political party.

A peaceful resolution of the charter issue should put a cap on the strife which has shattered the party for six years, beginning with the Vietnam war debate in 1968 and exploding over quotas and party reform in 1972.

No walkouts expected at convention

HOUSTON (AP) — Robert Strauss, national Democratic chairman, said Tuesday he expects no walkouts by delegates at the party's mini-convention starting Friday in Kansas City.

'I don't think we'll have any walkouts and I don't think we'll come out of there with any bitterness," Strauss said at a news conference

"I don't think anyone will say this is exactly what they wanted when they leave Kansas City with a new party charter but 99 per cent of the people will say we achieved a decent and progressive document that will be good for governing our party.

Strauss said he anticipates very substantive discussions.

"It will be open and free without total agreement on issues," he said. "I think it will be constructive, that we'll develop a party charter and go home as a unified party." He added that Kansas City "will be a very meaningful conference, not only for the Democrats but for the country.

Strauss talked with newsmen after meeting with the executive committee of the National Conference of Democratic Mayors, a meeting held in conjunction with the National League of Cities convention.
