Bellard home becomes quiet after a disappointing defeat

Mary K. Bellard

By BETH KRUGLER
Special to The Batt
Ever wonder what it's like around the house of a football coach after a disappointing defeat?
"It's been awfully quiet around here," said Mary K. Bellard, wife of the head Aggie coach the Monday after A&M was upset by SMU this season.
"He gets quiet — and thoughtful," she said describing Coach Emory Bellard in their Bryan home. "He takes out his yellow pad and makes lots of X's and O's, trying to right the wrongs."
They have three children, the youngest at 13 is just beginning his football career at Stephen F. Austin

Junior High School and two older children, a daughter, 22 and a son, 24.
Although Mrs. Bellard is kept busy with her sons' activities, cooking for the husband who hates to eat out when at home and other family duties, she finds time to do volunteer work at Saint Joseph Hospital as a Pink Lady.
When she has time, Mrs. Bellard enjoys painting. She rarely keeps any of the things she does but gives them away as presents.
Reading is something else Mrs. Bellard wishes she had more time for. Because of the time shortage, she's let all their magazine subscriptions run out except for one, Sports Illustrated.

Knicks continue pace with different players

NEW YORK (AP) — This was to be the year for the New York Knicks to fall apart. With the retirements of Willis Reed, Dave DeBusschere and Jerry Lucas, and the loss of Dean Meminger in the expansion draft, the rest of the National Basketball Association was expected to pass by the Knicks.
It hasn't happened.

serves, particularly Harthorne Wingo and Henry Bibby.
"They have Red Holzman, one of the game's most respected coaches whose concept of team defense is the Knicks' trademark.
The Knicks rank with the Chicago Bulls as the league's top defensive clubs, each allowing an average of about 95 points per game.

With slightly more than one-fourth of the NBA season completed, the Knicks have a 14-8 record, fourth best in the league. Last weekend they posted consecutive victories over Boston and Buffalo, two of the NBA's top teams, then followed up by beating Los Angeles 100-95 Tuesday night.

Offensively, with the loss of Reed and DeBusschere, the emphasis shifted markedly to the backcourt. Center John Gianelli and forward Phil Jackson are not consistent scorers, so the guards knew it was up to them to carry the load.

What's behind their surprising early season success?
"They have one of the best backcourt tandems in basketball in Walt Frazier and Earl Monroe.
"A number of aggressive young players have contributed as re-

And they have Frazier, the team captain, is among the most complete players in the game. He's scoring 19.5 points per game, but contributing just as much with his defense, play-making and even rebounding.
Monroe, meanwhile, ranks sixth in the league with a 23.5 scoring average.
