hurt the quality in the short run. In the long run we have a fine administration that can plan.

We just got a letter from Dr. Williams allowing more positions in the College of Business and the allotments are generous.

Jim Schell, graduate student, electrical engineering

I was here in '72. I graduated and came back. I like the new structures, the way they modernized. It's helped. I'm not too happy about the Building Use Fee Increase but you have to pay for the buildings . . .

Debra Dale, student worker, library reserve room

Last semester was the first Fall semester at A&M for me and what impressed me most was the friendliness of the students and I hope it continues next semester.

Evelyn Aldred, library staff

The wall that they're building is an absolute waste of money. The building use fee is exorbitant. Not that I'm against the furnishings of the MSC but I think that with the economic development they could hold off. I miss the Corps students' howdy.

Mary Smith, library staff

I'd like to see more study places in the library.

Hugh J. McCann, assistant professor, philosophy

I'd like to see people just more confident in A&M, in its programs, students and teams. And we shouldn't be so concerned with how we stack up against other people — especially the University of Texas.

We should be better in the arts — liberal and fine. As long as the school sees itself as just a technological and agricultural school it can't be a complete university . . . The main objective of Texas A&M is to help people become better men and better women. The main job is not to make better engineers and better farmers. We need to give people a firm foundation in their history, their culture and their values, above all their values.

Oh, and it really gripes me to be at a game against Baylor and hear people singing about the University of Texas. I don't want to hear about the University of Texas. Losers do that.

Ginger Stevens, secretary, student services

One thing they can get rid of is the building use fee.

Sharon Presswood, secretary for vice president of student services

I love the way student services division is going. I think I can feel the changes more than anyone. He has simplified it . . .

Federal grants available

First or second year students can get $50 to $1,050 under the Federal Government's Basic Educational Opportunity Grants.

Applicants must meet three criteria: (1) be enrolled full time at an eligible institution of postsecondary education; (2) be a U.S. citizen or permanent resident; (3) be enrolled in postsecondary school after April 1, 1973.

Applications are available from the Financial Aid Office, third floor of the YMCA Building.

Eligibility for Basic Grants is determined by a formula which measures financial need. There is no application cost and they never have to be paid back.

Vet rep certifies veterans

Veterans planning to attend A&M in the spring semester should contact the campus veterans representative office to make sure they are certified.

Most veterans who attended A&M during the fall term of 1974 are already certified to receive benefits under the newly expanded GI Bill, but they should also check with the campus office, notes vet rep Henry Vander Cruyssen.

Veterans not currently enrolled, but planning to carry course loads when classes begin Jan. 20 need to be certified now, he explains.

A three or four week clearing time is necessary, says Vander Cruyssen, so if veterans certify as soon as possible they should expect to receive checks within a week or so after classes resume.

The vet rep office is located in Hart Hall, section "B" on campus and veterans may contact either that office or may call the VA regional office in Waco.

The call to the Waco office is now available on a local basis by dialing 822-7352. The campus telephone number for the vet rep office is 845-1638.

Playwrights are eligible for $1,000

Playwrights at A&M are eligible for a $1,000 first prize in a contest sponsored by College of the Mainland at Texas City.

To be produced in conjunction with the American Revolutionary Bicentennial, the play may accurately depict any historical event or period from 1774-1924.

In addition to the top money, the winning playwright serves as technical director of the play using the Texas City college's 250-seat theater and talent from the local community.

All plays must be received by the officials no later than July 1 with announcement of the winner due by Sept. 1.

To run six times, the play should be adaptable to a three-hour length on a budget of $700 or less for non-musicals and $1,500 for musicals. Winning play becomes property of the college foundation with royalties divided between playwright and foundation.

Application information may be obtained from Robert T. Handy, director general of adult education and community services, College of the Mainland, 8001 Planer Highway, Texas City, Texas, 77590.
