

'But I don't cheat'

By T. C. GALLUCCI
Staff Writer

Snap! Snap! Giggle! Giggle! Cough! Cough! "All right, Smith, take off!" says the professor during an economics final.

"But, but, I wasn't cheating (who said he was? — guilty conscience?), honest," protests Smith. "Really, my fingers were itchy, I read something funny and I'm catching the flu. That's all."

For reasons unbeknownst to students, professors are creatures who suspect minor motions and sounds, particularly during test time. Scrapping chairs, clearing throats, scratching heads and bending over are actions viewed with supreme distaste by members of college faculty.

Because of changing times and the creative intelligence of college students, looking at a neighbor's exam is not suspect while sneezing is. Three prolonged sneezes and two short coughs mean that the first three answers are true and the fourth and fifth are false. No longer does it indicate a cold.

For the more ingenious, a trip to the restroom is in order. This takes beforehand effort, though. One writes the contents of a 350-page textbook on the paper towels in the restroom. After this, one gets down on his hands and knees and prays that no one will wash his hands in the next two hours. Once in the class, during the final, he "accidentally" breaks a ball-point pen in half, thus spilling black ink everywhere.

"Sir, may I go to the restroom and wash my hands, please? I just spilled ink all over me."

Cheating is a vice because it is dishonest, unscrupulous, wrong, unfair, rude, mean and people do it all the time. If it was none of the above, it would lose excitement and popularity and become just another habit.

"Cheating is the worst quality in a man. But if he is successful and creative at it, he is a genius," said Jack W. Martinsildonsen. Martinsildonsen is not anybody important, he simply likes to quote.

Cheating is not confined to college classrooms. Dad does it on his income tax, Joe does it to his wife. Nixon did it to the United States. Businessmen do it to consumers and the government does it to you.

Although they are not as imaginative as the average student, they are successful. Dad forgets that he won a mobile home in a contest. Joe has to work late on Thursday nights. Nixon wanted to be President again. Businessmen raise their prices. The government does whatever it wants.

The art of cheating does not have rules and guidelines. How to cheat is entirely up to the cheater. His personal situation dictates how, when, where and what/who to cheat. His only guiding light is not to get caught.

Someday, humanity will accept the human characteristics of men and women as the beings that they are. On that someday, vices will be nonexistent.

'Nuts predict the future'

It looks like more of the same

By ROXIE HEARN
Staff Writer

The keynote address of the 20th annual Student Conference on National Affairs took an unexpected angle Wednesday.

"Only nuts say they know what the future is," said Barry Bruce-Briggs to participants of the futuristic conference themed "America — The Third Hundred Years."

"All knowledge is history; we don't know anything about the future — it's a blank," he said.

Bruce-Briggs began his address by refusing to use the microphone system he deemed "unnecessary technology."

He gave the future of America's cities as "more of the same," calling change a slow, gradual process.

"I'm sort of playing the devil's advocate by opposing ideas that are going to be presented in the conference," he admitted.

He gave five influences on people's views of the future.

An individual's personality and his sense of time were the first two influences presented by Bruce-Briggs.

A pessimistic person might live under constant expectation of doom, whereas an optimist might never conceive of disaster, he said.

A wide range of time sense exists in individuals, he said. Some may be able to plan many years in the future, while others may not be able to see past the end of the day.

Fashion is the third influence on people's views of the future.

"There have been popular current views of the future since time began," said Bruce-Briggs.

He cited examples of men's expectations of depression following World War II, a communist takeover in the 50s, and an atomic war in the early 60s, none of which occurred.

A fourth influence is interest. A person may usefully predict the future in a way that would further his own personal interests, said Bruce-Briggs.

Ideology, or "what we believe about what we don't know about" is the fifth factor described by Bruce-Briggs.

To those in a hunting, gathering or farming community, the future is unchanging or irrelevant.

In a progressive community, the future is changing and changing for the better — more technology, more economic growth and more progress, said Bruce-Briggs.

A post-industrial society would agree it was going through a progressive period, but that fairly soon it would slow down and maybe drop off completely, said Bruce-Briggs.

A Malthusian world would believe economic progress was impossible, feeling it would outstrip the environmental resources.

Bruce-Briggs would not admit his advocacy of any of the four ideologies, although he did refer to the Malthusian concept as "a very dismal way to look at the future."

SCONA XX continues through Saturday.
