Worms-a must for fishing

By BRUCE L. SUBLETT
Outdoor Writer

A couple of weeks back, I said spinnerbaits are the hottest bait in the spring. Spinnerbaits are great, but it wouldn't make much sense to leave everything else out of your tacklebox to make room for them.

If I had to choose one other bait to go in the box, it would be the plastic worm. They catch bass just about any time of the year.

Worms take a little more practice than other baits to really be able to use them effectively. Worm fishing takes a lot of patience and some people are just too impatient to crawl a worm over the bottom.

One problem new fishermen have with worms is that they fish them with the wrong tackle, in the wrong water and with the wrong action.

The worm should be rigged with a single hook, not two or three as some manufacturers package them. The simplest rigging is known as the Texas Rig. The hook point is started through the nose of the worm, comes out the top about half an inch back, then it's buried lies straight. A slip sinker is put on the line in front of the worm.

To really feel the worm crawling under water obstacles, you need a rod with a stiff tip. A soft rod tip absorbs the tiny vibrations. Since a swivel would hurt the action of a worm, the worm is usually tied directly on the line. This means using a reel that isn't bothered by line twist. Spinning reels just won't work, and spincast reels aren't much better, so that leaves the plug-casting reels like the Garcia Ambassador and Diawa Millionaire.

Worms are the most effective when fished around underwater structure. Structure can be roughly defined as any change in the bottom contour: a creek-bank drop off, a little hill or a brush pile.

The action a worm needs depends on how the bass are feeding. A slow crawl (I mean s-l-o-o-o-w) when the fish are inactive in cold winter and hot summer and a faster pump and drop action when the fish are actively feeding are general guidelines.

When do you set the hook? There are three bitterly opposed factions that each believe in a different method. The quick-strike school says to set the hook as soon as you feel the bass pick the worm up. Their opposite, the count-down school, says to give the bass a good while to get the worm in his mouth. I take the middle-of-the-road approach of letting the bass take up the slack in the line, then hitting him.

What kind of worm is the best? There are only about forty million kinds on the market. They come in all the colors man has devised and in just about as many flavors. How a bass likes a strawberry flavored worm, I don't know, but they're not bad to chew on when the fishing gets slow. Generally, the shorter seven-inch worms in purple, blue or black work best. But every once in a while, bass will want only weird colors. I once caught some nice bass on a green and white speckled worm.

The new twister worms are coming on strong, with black and chartreuse a good color combination.

The TAMU Bass Club is close to being a reality. Chuck Use and Tony Krauska pushed the idea. The constitution has been written and they are having an organization meeting next Tuesday. The meeting is in Room 402 of the Rudder Tower at 7:30.

Ted Koy-pro griddler now A&M student

By ROBIN SCHRIVER
Contributor

A student who plays professional football, or a pro ball player who is also a student... in either case it's Ted Koy.

His role as a utility man for Buffalo Bills is not the only job he has. After each season Koy returns to Bryan-College Station and resumes his pre-veterinary studies at Texas A&M University.

Koy, who was a running back for the University of Texas (UT), received his undergraduate degree in journalism.

"Public relations work is not something I could get excited over for the rest of my life. I have always been interested in animals. I would rather have entered a pre-veterinary curriculum, but went to Texas in order to play football," he said.

During his college career, Koy was coached by Darrell Royal, UT head coach, and Emory Bellard, then an assistant coach.

The 27-year-old Koy said, "Darrell Royal and Emory Bellard are two of the best coaches I know. They are good at motivating their players and changing Xs and Os into plays on the field."

Despite the number of schools in the Southwest Conference (SWC) its professional draft ratio is low. There are approximately 40 SWC players in professional football.

Koy said, "The SWC draft ratio is a subject of continual debate. It depends on who you are talking to. For instance, I think it goes in cycles. In the SWC game the linemen are smaller and quicker. And you find more of a running game in the SWC. The people in this area like a running game."

"The Pack Eight and Big Ten play a passing game. Their linemen are larger and their passing game helps to get their players drafted. In fact, this year's draft came mainly from the Pack Eight."

After his college career and a tour of duty in the National Guard, Koy was drafted by the Oakland Raiders and later traded to the Buffalo Bills.

He enjoys the enthusiasm of the Buffalo fans, who fill the stadium to capacity despite ice covered stadium seats and freezing temperatures.

"I like the feeling you get from 80,000 screaming fans. Their enthusiasm can just be felt," he said. Leaving the limelight each season and returning to academics presented some obstacles for the five-year pro ball veteran.

"My biggest problem was backing up and starting (his education) over again. The other players finish the year working at productive jobs. They know where they're going," he said.

Koy faces the uncertainty of applying to vet school. He will begin the lengthy process of application to the Texas A&M veterinary school at the beginning of 1976.

Tankers go to UH for SWC meet

The fortunes of Texas A&M's swim team have been underwater as of late. Nevertheless, Coach Dennis Fosdick hopes his luck will do an about face as he takes his men's team to the Southwest Conference meet held at the University of Houston.

Fosdick will be taking a team of 25 men to Houston to compete in the meet. The events will begin to get underway today as Southwest Conference schools and UH are represented.

He must be doing something right.

Any man who has earned the Diamond Medallion must be doing something right. So right that it puts him in a class by himself. This designation, which goes to only a very few young Provident Mutual agents each year, reflects fine service to clients and an excellent grasp of life and health insurance counseling. Like all coveted honors, the Diamond Medallion is not easy to come by.

Les's agency, his clients, and his Company congratulate him on a job well done.
