

Halter's stand in election

By WAYNE T. RIFE
Interim City Editor

The primary reason for Dr. Gary M. Halter 33, to seek election in the April 1 College Station City Council election stems from his concern of land-use planning, lack of enforcement of zoning ordinance and proposed street extensions that he says threaten to destroy established neighborhoods.

Halter, a candidate in Place 1 for the city council of College Station, has been a resident in the area for seven years. His qualifications include practical experience in working with both state and local governments. He has also served as an advisor to numerous Texas cities on administrative and technology application problems.

Dr. Halter cited several issues he felt were of interest to students in the College Station area. Halter sees a need for development of park land around developed areas. Developers are required to set aside land for recreation when they build in the city. There are several areas such as this that the city has failed to develop into parks. Many of these park lots are near apartment houses occupied by students and he would like to see these areas developed so that the student and other residents of the city could benefit from them.

Another area of interest is the idea of the city taking over the transit system.

A specific issue Halter called attention to was the need of a pedestrian crossway of some sort across University Drive. Students could get from the university to apartments and business establishments much easier. When asked if he thought that students should be able to vote and run, he said that it is a right that the students should have. He also said though, that sometimes the best representatives of a student might not be one himself but instead a person who had the student views in mind and also the experience and knowledge to make decisions and keep student views in mind at the same time.

In closing Dr. Halter stated that he thought there should be closer cooperation between student organizations and city government in order to make sure student views are expressed.

Editor's Note: Additional stories planned on City Council election.

Taylor gets flight award

Jack Taylor, president of Texas Airmotive Inc., received the Flight Instructor of the Year Award for the Houston district.

Taylor has trained ROTC cadets for the last 17 years. Many of these cadets have progressed to careers in military and civil aviation.

By winning the district award, Taylor is eligible for the Southwest Regional Award which will be awarded in April.

Taylor's aviation career began in 1942 as a bomber pilot during World War II. Following his service in World War II, Taylor served as a cargo aircraft pilot and as a fighter pilot during the Korean conflict. After his tour of duty in Korea, Taylor became a flight instructor and sales manager for Texas Airmotive.
