Ram back 'gambling' investigated

AUSTIN (AP) — Los Angeles Rams running back Jim Bertelsen said Monday he has not been contacted by the National Football League about an investigation into his ownership in an Austin restaurant-bar where former Texas quarterback James Street was arrested on gambling charges last month.

"The only thing I know about this is what I read in the newspaper," he said. "I called the Rams today and they said they haven't heard anything about this either."

The Dallas Times Herald reported in its Tuesday editions that the NFL's security director, Jack Dahany, agreed that a player's ownership in an establishment where gambling was alleged to occur was sufficient grounds for a probe.

Bertelsen said he had only recently bought a 20 per cent interest in Common Interest, a north Austin restaurant-bar. And he added that parallels between his ownership of Common Interest and New York Jets quarterback Joe Namath's partnership in Bachelor's III are "a bunch of crap."

"Comparing Common Interest with Bachelor's III is like comparing a mountain and a molehill and Bachelor's III is the mountain."

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle ordered Namath to dissolve his interest in Bachelor's III in the face of evidence that the bar was frequented by known gamblers. The New York Jets quarterback had threatened to quit football rather than sell out, but he eventually did sell his portion of the club.

The incident which brought Bertelsen's partnership in Common Interest to prominence was the Feb. 14 arrest of Street by Austin vice squad officers in the bar's kitchen. He was later charged with one felony, promotion of a gambling operation, bookmaking, and two misdemeanors, gambling and possession of gambling records.
