George Lippe

Shroff

decision making boards," Shroff said.

As a third change, Shroff said he felt students should be able to eat in any dining hall.

"I feel that this is entirely possible if they would computerize the food service program," Shroff said.

Next, Shroff said A&M should withdraw from the Texas Student Association and the National Student Lobby since neither is beneficial to the school.

Fifth, Shroff believes there should be a self-repair facility for student cars.

The most important point in Shroff's platform is a pub on campus. He said he would like to see part of the Exchange Store Lounge converted to a pub with a dance floor.

Although Shroff is in favor of the shuttlebus system, he said he thought a more favorable contract could be negotiated with the shuttlebus company. The system, he said, is the worst financial plan that could be adopted. Since the Senate approved the action, he said, "senate action needs closer scrutiny."

The final area of Shroff's campaign is coed dorms. He feels they should be tried on a trial basis.

Flores

Instead of the immediate increase in the building use fee, Flores said he would have endorsed a graduate increase, if there had to be any at all. Also, limited enrollment at TAMU should be on a first applied — first served basis.

Flores says he doesn't know what the point behind limiting liquor on campus is, and says there should be a pub open to students, faculty and guests.

Lippe

"On others we will work directly with the administration. Lippe is optimistic about the future of the RHA and feels that it can be a decisive factor in maintaining and advancing the quality of student dorm living.

"RHA is a young organization," he said, noting that this was their first year of operation under a new constitution.

"This year we began laying the foundation for later years. We worked with the administration on several things, including the proposal for ice machines. They're starting to listen to us.

"If we can show proper student need, I think we can be very effective."

To show this need, however, Lippe noted that better student input will be a must. He said he would like to see more students active on RHA committees.

Better communication between the RHA and the students is needed. Lippe charged the entire chain of command with this task.

"We have an ideal type of network for communication and feedback," he noted.

"The dorm councils take back information to each ramp or wing and in their meetings it is passed on to the students.

"Attendance at the meetings is bad. Students don't realize how powerful they can be."

Lippe hopes to increase the awareness of the students through a massive public relations effort which might include a regular newsletter.

Kent

of Kent's priorities. He hopes to get the faculty of the different colleges involved in the council.

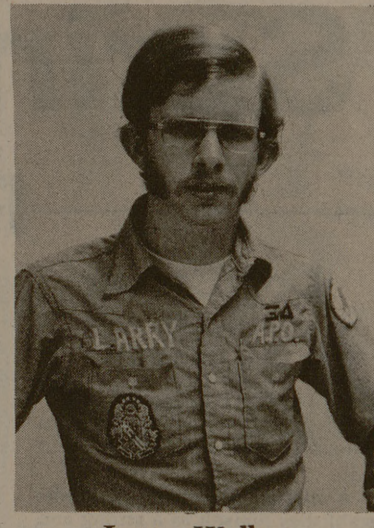

Some expansion of the present Pass-Fail system is also recommended by Kent. Other programs supported are expansion of undergraduate research opportunities, student input into professor tenureships and an increase in contract-type courses.

A major part of Kent's platform is increasing the flexibility of degree programs and course selections.

"This would meet the student's need for a broader education," said Kent.

"The thrust of my activities will be in academic affairs, but I'll work on everything," he said.

Kent also favors the formation of a student food co-op.

Larry Walker

Dunn

co-op and establish co-ops for food, gas and clothing.

"I have worked for student control over fees," he said. "Since it is student money, student government should have control of it."

Dunn said he wants to limit any further increases in building use fees.

"I favor student involvement in the process of any fee increase," he said.

Dunn wants two changes in the Food Service Program.

One is the freedom for students to eat in any dining hall on campus and secondly, Dunn wants a campus lunch program for off-campus students.

"I feel confident that I can lead the student body," he said. "I am looking forward to a student government that has a better relationship with The Battalion and all students."

T. Walker

and state policy making could be made through the National Student Lobby and the National Student Association.

In the area of finance, Walker would like to see a Student Business Council created. The council would review expenditures of student's money, such as student fees and vending machine profits, before they are made.

The final area is services. Walker is in favor of student-run co-ops for books, gas and food, and a student Wide Area Telephone Service (WATS) system.

Walker also said he wants to start an International Student Center. The center would serve both foreign students and American students as a place to learn of other cultures.

"I feel the biggest problem (of student government) is lack of student support," Walker said. "There is the mistaken belief that the student senate is student government. Students don't know the other stuff it is doing."

Marcello

University Bookstore to be run on a nonprofit basis and a food co-op.

Marcello said he would like to see students served liquor somewhere on campus.

Citing the groups opposing liquor on campus, he said that he "does not believe in legislating morality."

Marcello believes that many people have "lost the principle idea that the students and the faculty are the University."

people have classes," Walker said. Walker spoke at length on the failure of the MSC to serve student needs. He felt it unfair that a student center should close its doors to students at 11 p.m. and leave them no convenient place to gather to study or talk. Working with the Student Senate, Walker said he wants to "get the center open for student use."

Walker also expressed concern over the RHA's image. He voiced discontent with the people who get in and then do nothing.

"We don't get much respect from the Student Government," he said. It is an image he wants changed.

"I want the RHA to prove that it can be worthwhile. We can't afford to waste our time with matters beyond our control, things that involve state laws.

"We need to get the students involved, get coordination between the dorms and get the RHA members enthusiastic enough to talk contact with their constituents."

Walker is a junior environment design major.
