Combining police and firemen in single force proposed in bill

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposal combining the duties of firemen and policemen was ridiculed Tuesday by a Houston police sergeant as an effort to create "Mr. Superman."

City officials of Wichita Falls supported the bill to allow cities with populations of 10,000 to 100,000 to establish the job of public safety officer.

The officer would be trained to fight fires, as well as criminals. Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, sponsored the bill, and Mayor Max Druger and city manager Gerald Fox testified in support of it at a meeting of the Senate Inter-governmental Committee.

Farabee said city officials thought it could reverse rising crime rates in Wichita Falls and, at the same time, hold the budget in line without hiring more and more policemen.

Fox estimated that as much as one-third of the budget goes for fire and police services. Harry Campsey, a former Wichita Falls councilman, described the policeman-fireman as a "package where everybody can win—public safety officers would get more money, the taxpayers would get more for their money and the public would get more protection."

Thirty-five cities are using such a program, Campsey said, but in Texas only the Dallas-Fort Worth airport offers such service.

Two Wichita Falls law officers opposed the proposal, with Sgt. Roy Stone claiming that "all police officers are opposed to any type of integration" with fire departments.

Any time a special unit is created, Stone said, there are problems of "morale and jealousy—if a rookie public safety officer makes more than me, there's a morale problem on my part."

Sgt. Julius Knigge of the Houston Police Department said the "psychological makeup of policemen and firemen is different—a fireman deals with material; police deal with people."

Knigge referred to the dual role as an attempt to create "Mr. Superman."

He represented the Texas Police Association, which opposed the bill.

Also objecting to the measure were A. J. Burke, president of the Texas Municipal Police Association; the Texas State Association of Firefighters; the Fort Worth Firefighters Association; the International Association of Firefighters; Dennis Holder, chief recruiter for the Houston Fire Department; and Wichita Falls fireman J. C. Mason.

The bill was sent to a subcommittee after a two-hour hearing.
