Airlines denied request

AUSTIN (AP)—A retired judge said Thursday he has denied Texas International Airlines' request for an injunction to stop Southwest Airlines' flights to the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Retired State Dist. Court Judge Wilmer Hunt said his formal order will be signed in the next couple of days.

Texas International was seeking a temporary restraining order to halt Southwest's service between Houston, Dallas and San Antonio and the Valley.

The Texas Aeronautics Commission approved the flights Feb. 6, and Southwest began flying into the Valley Feb. 11.

Hunt heard two days of testimony last month before asking the attorneys involved to submit written briefs.

James Wilson, a lawyer for Texas International, argued before Hunt that because of the TAC's ruling "Texas International is obviously being deprived of a substantial market at this time."

Herbert Kelleher, Southwest's general counsel, said Texas International had violated a pledge that it would not try to stop Southwest's Valley flights as long as an appeal from the TAC decision was in effect.

Wilson said changing conditions in the Valley made it necessary for Texas International to seek court action.

Two experts on artificial islands from the Texas A&M University staff will be featured Monday at the Seventh Annual Offshore Technology Conference in Houston.

Daniel Bragg and Norman C. Whitehorn, both of the Industrial Economics Research Division, will discuss the islands as a possible solution to industry expansion.

Activities analyzed in the study include oil refining, petrochemical manufacturing, electric power generation, paper-making, iron and steel production, nuclear fuel processing, deepwater ports, and recreation.

Offshore island industry could relieve the impact of refining emissions on nearby areas as well as any hazards of nuclear power plants, according to Bragg and Whitehorn.
