Smoker's law goes unnoticed

University News Service
The first and second days of the Texas "no smoking" law met with little fanfare and few effects among Texas A&M University students.

The legislation making it unlawful to smoke in certain places marked "No Smoking," among three elevators and schools, became effective Monday.

At first glance, Texas A&M appears to have few devout smokers. A casual stroll around campus here reveals almost as many broken leg casts as cigarettes.

A&M students seem to be following a national trend. The Federal Trade Commission has reported to Congress that, for the first time in five years, Americans are smoking less despite heavy advertising by tobacco companies.

Most A&M smokers apparently prefer to light up over a cup of coffee in a snack area or in the oak-shaded outdoors.

Of a dozen or more smokers formally polled, the majority did not realize the law had taken effect, although most remember reading articles dealing with such legislation. Almost all doubted it would change their own habits any.

Only three nicotians, all of whom preferred to remain anonymous, offered expanded comments.

One doubted the law could be enforced. A second smoker agreed, saying his smoking usually was done outside classrooms and elevators anyway.

The third half-jokingly admitted more dependence than the others. "I hope they have cigarettes at the jail."

Horsepower overcomes desert heat

Associated Press
FURNACE CREEK, Calif. — Never underestimate the power of a horse, or a 62-year-old woman. Flora Stewart said she and her palomino finished a two-day jaunt across blistering Death Valley.

The horse had shed its orange hat pants, but Mrs. Stewart was still wearing her sequined leotard and sombrero when she reached a guest ranch Monday night to end the 62-mile journey.

"There were points where the flesh was ready to give up, but the spirit wouldn't let it," said Mrs. Stewart.

She said she and her horse had encountered temperatures that reached 126 degrees at midday and gusty afternoon winds that lifted her two inches off the saddle at one point.

Mrs. Stewart rode 18 miles Sunday from Hell's Gate to Furnace Creek. On Monday, she and her horse were taken before dawn by vehicle to Ashford Mill, 44 miles to the south, then she retraced the route back to Furnace Creek.

No one is known to have made a horseback journey across the valley before.

"I like doing things no one else has done," Mrs. Stewart said in a telephone interview Monday night. "It was a challenge."

"I wanted to prove there's still a lot a 62-year-old woman can do. And I wanted to prove what a magnificent animal the horse is. In this day of the energy crisis, the horse is not obsolete."

Her 8-year-old palomino, Son of Fire — she calls him "Sonny" — donned a pair of orange hot pants for the first leg of the journey Sunday. Lettered on either side was an advertisement for a Palm Springs clothing store where Mrs. Stewart works.

Language group moves office to A&M home

University News Service
Executive offices for the South Central Modern Language Association are being moved to Texas A&M University. Headquarters for the association have been at Rice University since 1967.

The South-central group (SCMLA), affiliated with the Modern Language Association of America (MLA), covers Oklahoma, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana, in addition to Texas and has a membership of 2,000. MLA is the leading scholarly organization in the literary, language and related fields.

Dr. Richard H. Costa, professor of English, will serve as executive secretary-treasurer for SCMLA.

Costa, who joined the faculty in 1970 after teaching for nine years at Syracuse University, has published books on H. G. Wells and Malcolm Lowry and is editor-publisher of "Quartet," a quarterly magazine of the arts.
