Aggieland attraction

Although the Aggie lands are in, students were waiting as long as an hour to pick them up Thursday. Lines stretched from the second floor of the Reed McDonald Building down the stairs and out the front door when this picture was taken.

Hearst inquest stalled

HARRISBURG — Micki McGee Scott and Martin Miller, granted immunity from prosecution, refused again to answer questions Thursday before a federal grand jury investigating the Patty Hearst case. The panel promptly adjourned indefinitely. Prosecutors took no action toward initiating contempt proceedings against Miller or Mrs. Scott, which surprised the pair's lawyers. "They said we're excused until further notice," said Mrs. Scott. Attorneys for Miller and Mrs. Scott seemed puzzled by the adjournment but said the government could call them for a future contempt hearing. Their attorneys viewed the immunity grants as an effort to force Mrs. Scott and Miller to testify against her husband, Jack, a sports activist and considered to be the target of a federal investigation into the alleged harboring of Miss Hearst last year.

Party set to honor Bill Moore

State Sen. William T. Moore, D-Bryan, will be honored by his close friends and associates Oct. 14 at Washington-on-the-Brazos State Park. The event, an old-fashioned barbecue and party, will be held to pay tribute to Moore's 26 years of service in the Texas Senate. Entertainment will be provided by the Prairie View A&M Band, Texas A&M University Singing Cadets and others.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe is also scheduled to appear. The event gets underway at 5 p.m. Tickets are available to the public for $2.50 each. For tickets and information, call 823-8179.

Outside the courtroom, before his wife and Miller returned to the grand jury chamber, Scott called the government action "despicable and outrageous" and a continuation of a pattern of harassment. "Now what the government is trying to do is take my wife and one of my closest friends and attempt to jail them," Scott said. Scott's attorney, William Kunsler, said the government was attempting to turn Mrs. Scott and Miller "into informers... We are back to Nazi Germany when parents had to testify against their children and sisters against brothers." The attorney said he believed the government eventually would indict Scott on harboring charges. The subpoenas were issued by the Senate committee as part of its investigation of Nixon administration efforts to prevent Chilean Marxist Salvador Allende from coming to power in the fall of 1970.

Nixon gives tapes to Senators

(Continued from page 1) delayed the committee's investigation of the CIA and other U.S. intelligence agencies. The Nixon files, consisting of some 42 million items, are the subject of a complex legal proceeding to determine whether they are owned by Nixon or the government. The subpoenas were issued by the Senate committee as part of its investigation of Nixon administration efforts to prevent Chilean Marxist Salvador Allende from coming to power in the fall of 1970.

From yoga to welding

Consol offers it all

By PAULA GEYER Staff Writer

From belly dancing to welding, the A&M Consolidated School Community Education Program teaches it all. The program, which begins classes Monday, is designed to provide area residents a chance to get involved in educational, cultural and recreational activities.

Charles W. Greenawalt, community education director, said 737 students of all ages were already enrolled Thursday. Total enrollment in the 60 classes is expected to be between 1,200 to 1,500 students before classes are completed in five to 10 weeks.

"Education doesn't stop when formal schooling is out of the way," Greenawalt said. "The students are coming from College Station, Bryan, Franklin, Hearne and as far as 40 miles away."

Tuition fees are 50 cents per class hour with a minimum fee of $5. Tuition does not cover costs of class materials.

The classes will be held weekdays, evenings and weekends at all four A&M Consolidated schools. The schools are: A&M Consolidated High School, 701 W. Loop; A&M Consolidated Middle School, 200 Anderson; South Knoll Elementary School, 1220 Boswell; and College Hills Elementary School, 101 Williams. Classes will also be taught at the A&M Consolidated Special Services Building at 1300 Jersey St.; First Baptist Church of College Station, 200 Main St.; St. Thomas Episcopal Church Center, 906 Jersey St.; and at some local businesses.

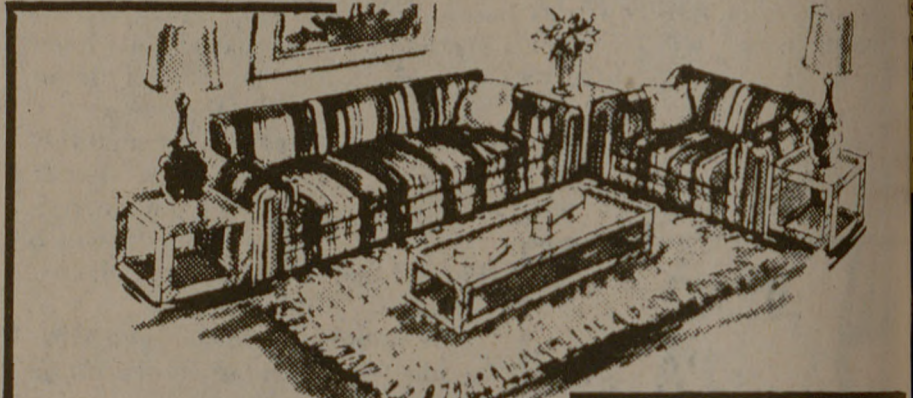

Classes will be taught by local residents who have good background knowledge in the subject and would like to teach. Some of the teachers will be Texas A&M University graduate students. No teacher's certificate is required.

"The program pays for itself," Greenawalt said. "The tuition provides the teachers with a salary of $5 an hour and also pays for use of the buildings."

Babysitting will be provided at the schools for 50 cents per child per hour during evening classes.

Courses offered include carpentry, needlepoint, auto mechanics for men and women, indoor gardening, beginning electronics, sewing, wrestling, typing, estate management, cheerleading and yoga. Already 66 women have signed up for the belly dancing course, Greenawalt said. "The schools belong to the community," he said, "so the community might as well use them."
