

Campaign trail?

Nellie hopes not

Associated Press
DALLAS — Whatever John Connally's plans, wife Nellie says she hopes they don't include another ride down the campaign trail.
"He will go on speaking. He feels he has things to say that will help the country," she said, interviewed while her husband was here to address the National Federation of Republican Women. I hope he never goes campaigning again."
But Nellie had an early warning of John's love of politics. It first emerged in their dating days at the University of Texas when he was student body president.
"I knew he wanted a political career," she explained. "I just didn't know how total it would be."
Since that time, politics has been the steady third partner of their marriage. And Mrs. Connally admits that life with a public man has had its share of traumas.
"The most heinous of nightmares" was the assassination of President

John F. Kennedy Nov. 22, 1963. Mrs. Connally and her husband, then governor of Texas, were riding in the front seat of the presidential limousine when Kennedy was killed. Connally also suffered a gunshot wound to the shoulder and wrist.
"The assassination is as unbelievable to me today as it was then," she said.
Another difficult time was when Connally was being tried in Washington, D.C. this year, accused of accepting two $5,000 bribes from Associated Milk Producers Inc. AMPI lobbyist Jake Jacobsen in return for increasing milk price supports.
Connally was acquitted in the case, but Nellie says the trial was "hard on the spirit."
"Even though we knew there was nothing there, it was difficult."
But neither incident overshadows the suicide of daughter Kathleen in 1958 in Floresville. "The loss of a child is the most terrible thing that can happen," she said. Her eyes glistened and there was a catch in her voice. "I'd rather not talk about Kathleen at all."

But through it all, they've managed, she says, because "John and I have the happy faculty of going on and living and doing. I have a young sensitive family and they were little troupers through all these things."
Chief among the "troupers" were the four Connally grandchildren, 6-year-old Amy; 5-year-old Tracy; 2-year-old Robert C. Ammann; and 2-year-old John B. Connally IV.
"I can tell when John comes home if it has been a really bad day and if he is down. That's when I send for a grandbaby."
In addition to the Connally grandbabies, there are the Connally children. John B. Connally III, at 29, works with "That other firm," Baker-Botts of Houston. Daughter Sharon and husband Robert Ammann III live in Floresville and son Mark and wife Anne manage the Connally ranch there.

United Nations says S. Africa must go

Associated Press
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The U.N. General Assembly opens its 30th annual session Tuesday, and an attempt to oust South Africa from the assembly looms among its sharpest issues.
The 75 nonaligned countries that form a majority of the 138 U.N. members have instructions from the Lima nonaligned foreign ministers' conference of Aug. 25-30 to "work for the expulsion of the Pretoria regime" and the granting of U.N. observer status to so-called South African liberation movements.
The ministers described the white-minority South African government as "a full-fledged fascist regime bent on perpetuating the ruthless dominations of the indigenous population" — a reference to the country's black majority.
Negotiators strove Monday to agree on a resolution for comprehensive aid to developing countries that a current special session of the assembly could adopt as the final action of the meeting that began Sept. 1.
Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders and U.S. Ambassador Daniel Patrick Moynihan were negotiating for the United States with Iranian, Malaysian and Venezuelan officials representing the developing countries.
A U.N. spokesman said the close of the special assembly, set for Monday night, might be postponed to Tuesday morning.

The negotiators had trouble with how to work provisions calling for developed countries to boost their development aid to 0.70 per cent of their gross national product by 1980 and for part of the International Monetary Fund's special drawing rights for currency stabilization to be diverted to development aid.
Nonaligned sources predicted privately Monday that South Africa's critics, including the powerful African group, would seek to bar South Africa from the assembly's proceedings as they succeeded in doing last year.

Draft pardons stop

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The Presidential Clemency Board worked hard Monday trying to finish action on 300 cases remaining before it was to go out of existence at midnight, as required by law.
President Ford issued an executive order assigning to the Justice Department the job of tying up the loose ends, except for the job program under Selective Service.
This mainly involves 910 applicants on whom more information is needed for a decision by the attorney general, board spokeswoman Nia Nicholas said.
The board will close on schedule, return the confidential files on the applicants to the proper federal agencies and file its papers with the archives, she said.
As of last Friday, Mrs. Nicholas said, the board has processed 15,500 applicants, sent recommendations to Ford for approval on 5,361 and he had signed 2,402 warrants for clemency pardons.
The exact number of outright pardons or pardons conditioned on a period of public service recommended to Ford won't be figured out until the job is wrapped up, Mrs. Nicholas said.
The board was created exactly a year ago by Ford to enable convicted draft evaders and punished deserters of the Vietnam era to wipe out some of the stigma "with a second chance" by earning pardons.
However, only 21,000 of an estimated 120,000 considered eligible applied. And it turned out that 5,000 of the 21,000 were ineligible for various reasons, including the fact that some were World War I and World War II or Korea era offenders.

Of the 16,000 applicants who were eligible, the board has been recommending outright pardons for about half and pardons conditioned on a work period for the other half. The latter could be assigned up to two years on the job, but few have gotten more than a year.
About 6 per cent are receiving decisions recommending "no clemency."
Board Chairman Charles E. Goodell has expressed disappointment at the small number of men who signed up but says the program is worthwhile for the benefit it is giving those who did sign up.
Goodell, when asked how many might have signed up in a gamble for an outright pardon with no intention of performing a job, said he doesn't know. But he notes that all promised when they signed up to perform if ticketed for jobs.
Since they have 30 days to report after the President acts on each case, only 306 men have reported so far. A month ago the figure was 130. Those actually working total 54.
Those in another part of the clemency program, that for unpunished deserters, also made a promise to perform jobs when processed out of service by the military with an undesirable discharge without having to face punitive action. But two-thirds are not doing so.
Of the 5,532 deserters who joined the military program, 2,361 have dropped out or been kicked out for not performing satisfactorily. In addition 1,000 others never reported for jobs.
