Up 13 per cent

Crime remains problem

WASHINGTON — The nation's crime rate rose 13 per cent during the first half of this year compared with the same period a year ago, the FBI reported Tuesday.

The rate was markedly less than the increase reported for each succeeding quarter for nearly two years. But Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi said, "We can claim no great solace in the fact that the rate in the rise of serious crime has lessened somewhat. Crime remains an enormous national problem and current levels are, and must be, seen as unacceptable."

Broken down into three-month periods, the FBI statistics showed an 18 per cent surge for January, February and March but only an 8 per cent increase for April, May and June.

That's the first time in 21 months that the quarterly increase has slowed to less than the double-digit level.

The FBI Uniform Crime Reports are based on the number of murders, rapes, robberies, burglaries, assaults, larcenies and motor vehicle thefts reported to more than 8,000 state and local police agencies. The statistical report suggests no explanations for the fluctuations.

In all cases, the percentage of change is computed by measuring the volume of reported crime against the volume for the same period a year earlier. Other studies indicate that actual crime may be two to three times higher than reported crime.

The new report showed increases in all seven crime categories, in cities of all sizes and rural and suburban areas as well.

But the 13 per cent jump for the six-month period was noticeably less than the 17 per cent increase for the full year of 1974.

The current trend of crime increases began in the last three months of 1973 when the rate rose 16 per cent compared with the final quarter of 1972.

DeGaetano sets powerful mood

By ARTHUR J. BROWN

Robert DeGaetano made his second appearance at A&M Tuesday night as a "tool to transmit something from a higher power."

That "higher power" being music. "Music is like electricity," he said after the performance, "We can't see it but it makes us feel good." His performance was proof of his statement.

He strode confidently onto the stage with a slight smile on his face and began with "Introduction and Rondo" by Felix Mendelssohn, building to forceful peaks and rolling down to slow peaceful lulls. De Gaetano's face showed deep concentration and his eyes reflected the mood of the music he played.

His music did transmit a mood, as in "Jeux d'eau," when the rippling music gave an impression of water running down a mountain stream. The entire audience felt the mood and their applause brought him back for two encores.

A Bach toccatta, the second selection played, started slowly but built quickly to a strong and lively body, then tapered off again to a peaceful end.

A sonata by Samuel Barber and

"Etude-Tableau" by Sergei Rachmaninoff were both long selections with great variation of intensity. Both had sections containing several seconds of silence. At the end of "Etude-Tableau" a few people clapped hesitantly. DeGaetano turned to the audience and with a smile said to the doubters, "It's over."

The last selection on the program, a sonata by Frederic Chopin, was quiet, restful music with which De Gaetano soothed the audience.

The first encore was "Consolation," a peaceful and beautifully played piece of music. For the second encore he played "Harpicord Toccatta," a fast and lively selection, after which he received a standing ovation.

DeGaetano's profession takes him to many parts of the U.S. and abroad as he gives solo performances and plays with different orchestras. He says that the size of audiences at colleges and universities has increased over the past couple of years. He enjoyed the A&M audience, though it was small. Possibly, he said, because of poor public relations announcing the event. Perhaps when he returns to A&M more people will be able to enjoy the gift of music he has to give.
