

Defense lawyer quits

Associated Press
SAN FRANCISCO — Jailed newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst doesn't expect to be set free, according to the attorney who withdrew from her defense team.

Terence Hallinan, who represented Miss Hearst from her arrest Sept. 18 until last week, also said in an interview published Tuesday that Miss Hearst had been converted to a "leftwing person" but still was far short of the "supermilitant radical" image she projected when taken into custody.

Hallinan was interviewed by the weekly newspaper Berkeley Barb before and after his Oct. 6 announcement that he was withdrawing from the defense ranks. He would not specify the reasons for his departure, other than to say, "They didn't want me interfering."

Hallinan also said: "They'd have to pay me a million dollars" before he would rejoin the defense team, now headed by flamboyant Boston attorney F. Lee Bailey and his partner, Albert Johnson.

Hallinan's withdrawal came amid reports that other defense attorneys were bargaining to have Miss Hearst turn state's evidence.

However, in a telephone interview from his Boston office, Johnson said Hallinan had bowed out for reasons of his own and again denied that the defense was plea bargaining.

Hallinan was asked in the interview if Miss Hearst expected to go free.

"I don't think so," he answered, adding that she appears prepared for the possibility of going to prison "as best she can be, considering her state."

Hallinan said Miss Hearst underwent changes during her travels with the Symbionese Liberation Army but she was not really a radical.

"She was never part of (the Left). The mannequin that they created was, but not Patricia Hearst."

"She is now a leftwing person, and she was not. But I'm not really sure how much are independent thoughts and how much are something that somebody else told her. She doesn't seem to have any political background."

Sedan hits Ford's car

Associated Press
HARTFORD, Conn. — A tan sedan ran into the side of President Ford's armored limousine Tuesday night at a downtown intersection after he gave a speech here. A White House spokesman said Ford was not hurt.

The President's limousine continued on to the airport here without stopping. Ford jogged up the steps to his plane, Air Force One, and took off for Washington.

A White House spokesman also said there were apparently no injuries in the private car, not part of the Ford's motorcade.

The front of the private car was smashed. The front fenders were curled up and the radiator was pushed in.

The collision occurred about three and a half blocks from the Civic Center where Ford spoke to a Republican fund-raising dinner.
