

Grandmother makes fold-out comeback

Associated Press
CHICAGO — Candy Barr, who wowed the 1950s bump and grind circuit with her childlike good looks and her amply-endowed body, is on the comeback trail.
The 40-year-old grandmother has turned her back on her days as a stripper. Instead, she's making her return with a staple in her naval—as the subject of a full-color nude pictorial to be published next spring by Oui magazine.
"Sex is the business I've always been in," says Candy, who spent time in prison on a marijuana conviction. "Everyone knows that I was forced into prostitution when I was 16. Everyone knows about the stag films and pictures and all those years I was a stripper."
"I just wanted to pose for these pictures to kind of complete my own history, you know?"
Her "history" began in the 1950s at the Colony Club in Dallas, where her curves 40-23-36 and blonde good looks catapulted her to success as a stripper. Later, a grand jury refused to return an indictment against her after she shot her estranged husband in the stomach. He survived.

In 1957, she was convicted of marijuana possession and sentenced to 15 years in the Goree Unit of the Texas Department of Corrections. She served three years before she was paroled and later pardoned by then-Texas Gov. John Connally. She has collected a string of husbands — her real name is Juanita Dale Slusher Dabbs Phillips Sakhan.
But Candy hasn't changed.
While an art director from Oui magazine crawled on his hands and knees recently in Chicago, spraying bug killer on the studio floor, Candy watched serenely. Wearing only a pair of PF Flyers sneakers. Unlaced.
"I don't know how we get so many ants up this high in the building," confessed the art director.
There were some dead ants over by the brass bed swathed in light blue satin sheets where Candy would soon be posing.
Later, she talked about her present life. "I just live a quiet life down in Brownwood, Tex."

Milner Hall renovation plans set

Renovation of Milner Hall and replacement of the Systems Building elevator were items presented to President Jack K. Williams Thursday. The plans will be presented to the Board of Regents and, in turn, to the Building Committee.
According to Gen. A. R. Luedcke, executive vice-president for physical plants and grounds, approval of program requirements and authorization of preliminary design was previously granted by the Board for Milner Hall.
Now drawn, the plans provide 65-year-old Milner as a faculty office building with class and seminar rooms.
Luedcke estimates the cost of renovation at $1 million.
No new dorms are planned to replace the Milner area.
Also presented were plans to ask the Board to take bids to replace the Systems Building elevator.
