

Ford undecided about campaign subsidy use

WASHINGTON — President Ford's re-election officials are still undecided whether they will accept a federal campaign subsidy available to all candidates for 1976 presidential nominations.

About 60 Ford campaign finance chairmen and advisers from across the nation met here Monday to plot strategy on fund-raising and their leaders said the President will have no trouble raising all the money he is permitted to spend seeking the Republican nomination.

Peter Kaye, spokesman for the President Ford Committee, said acceptance of the federal subsidy is still an open question. "We haven't decided yet whether to take it or not," he said.

Kaye said the committee is going forward with paperwork to file for the matching funds anyway, pending a decision. Funds will not be available until the first of next year.

Under the new financing laws, candidates are limited to spending $10 million, plus $2 million for fund-raising, to finance their bids for nomination. Federal subsidies of up to $5 million to match small contributions are also allowed.

The only advantage to the Ford campaign in passing up the federal money would be to use it as a political talking point, particularly if former California Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan accepts subsidies.

Reagan had at one point said he would not take federal aid, but his managers more recently have suggested that he probably will take it.

By skipping federal aid and financing his campaign entirely with private donations, Ford could try to score points with conservative Republicans who do not like the new system.

Speaking in terms that suggested federal matching funds would not be accepted, Max Fisher, vice-chairman of the Ford campaign finance committee, said raising the money can be accomplished quickly, within the next few months.

According to spokesmen, the Ford finance team has raised about $1.2 million so far, including some $500,000 that could be matched by subsidy money.

JFK Library to be built on Boston Harbor

BOSTON — Assisted President John F. Kennedy was a public man who loved the sea. For those reasons, and others, the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum will be built at the University of Massachusetts campus on Boston Harbor.

There had been plans to build the Kennedy Library and Museum near Harvard University, the late president's alma mater, but the objections of local residents scuttled those plans.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., told a news conference Monday that the University of Massachusetts site was the unanimous choice of the Kennedy family and trustees of the library corporation.

"President Kennedy was very much a public man and a public figure," he said. "It is appropriate that the museum and archives that bear his name be housed in a public place."

He said the school's site on Boston Harbor was important to the family and the trustees in view of John F. Kennedy's close association with the sea during his lifetime. One requirement, he said, was the building be "as close to the water as possible."

The decision ended 12 years of squabbling and threatened legal action. Kennedy said the trustees abandoned the Cambridge, Mass., site near Harvard because "a small and vociferous group was prepared to entangle the corporation ad infinitum in the courts."

Community groups in Cambridge, across the Charles River from Boston, had complained the museum would draw up to one million persons annually into the already congested area, adding to pedestrian and auto problems.
