MOSCOW — When Boris Amarantov, the well-known Soviet pantomimist, performs these days it is in a Moscow apartment where one

Guerrillas defensive, sources say

Associated Press

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina — The recent use of army troops and air force jets on the side of police has put Argentine guerrillas on the defensive, security sources say, but no one predicts rapid victory.

Hundreds of persons have died in battles ranging from mountain forests near Tucuman to wealthy neighborhoods of Buenos Aires.

Guerrillas of both the left and right wings ambush with such cold-blooded regularity that traffic police on the freeway around Buenos Aires wear civilian clothes and use unmarked cars.

They strike at lonely garrisons and outposts. Guerrilla infiltrators blew up a runway in front of a jet transport as it was taking off, killing six. Others blasted a hole in a missile-carrying destroyer.

Two major guerrilla groups have amassed scores of millions of dollars in kidnap ransoms and periodically assassinate major national figures.

In recent weeks, the army has joined federal police in rounding up suspects, raiding suspected hideouts and screening traffic. Large numbers have been arrested under state of siege provisions imposed in November 1974.

In one case, heavily armed men wearing hoods burst into homes in the Andean city of Mendoza and carried off at least 30 persons, including Jorge Bonardell, a newspaperman.

Families feared the victims had been kidnaped by right-wing guerrillas who habitually execute suspected leftist. But, after public clamor, the army admitted Bonardell was under arrest for suspected subversive activity.

"I am making no accusations, but that is the same manner of operations used by the mysterious Argentine Anti-Communist Alliance (AAA)," said Victor Buschi, executive secretary of the Argentine League for Human Rights.

The league, a left-leaning organization which defends and aids political prisoners, estimates that at least 3,000 persons have been picked up in the past few weeks, although many have been released.

According to the league, an additional 3,000 of about 6,000 arrested since last year remain in custody.

Although the government denies allegations of torture, police officials say privately that military and police interrogators tell of using blowtorches, electric prods and other devices.

In most of Argentina, life goes on as normal. Government spokesmen say an all-out war is on, but in the cities signs of it are mainly limited to occasional police convoys and the bombed out fronts of banks and restaurants.

Still, more than a dozen civilians, including children, have been killed by nervous sentries in recent months, and others have been slain accidentally in shoot-outs.

More than 1,000 persons have been killed in all forms of political violence in the past year.

wall has been painted black as a backdrop and a reading lamp serves as a spotlight.

Putting on his show for a few friends and foreigners is a long way from the days when Amarantov played the stage of the Kremlin Palace of Congresses and Soviet dignitaries were in the audience of 6,000.

Amarantov, 35, says he got fed up with the working conditions he faced and what he believed were attempts to stifle his art. So he renounced Soviet citizenship and asked for permission to leave the Soviet Union.

So far, Soviet authorities have not responded. "My work is my life and I couldn't continue the way things were going," Amarantov said in an interview.

"I just want to leave and I don't believe that it's a crime to give up your citizenship," he said.

Nevertheless, he took an unusual approach. Some Soviet artists, like Alexander Solzhenitsyn, have been thrown out of the country. Others, such as dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov, defected and the renowned cellist Mstislav Rostropovich arranged permission to leave for an indefinite period.

Amarantov's case may be one instance of increasing ferment among Soviet artists. Many writers, painters and dancers have left after becoming increasingly restive in the fetters of Socialist realism.

Some, like conductor Gennady Rozhdestvensky, soprano Irina Arhipova and actor Vladimir Vysotsky, are allowed to work abroad and travel rather freely.

But in the Soviet Union the arts often are tied closely to political considerations and no matter how famous the artist, he must still toe the line.

Amarantov is not as widely known as Rostropovich, Baryshnikov or Solzhenitsyn. Still, he built a good reputation doing variety theater, films and television shows in a country where pantomime is a lively art form and very popular. Despite popularity at home and success abroad Amarantov dreamed of running his own theater, employing all the pantomimic arts from ballet to juggling.

In 1972 he managed to convince one concert agency to let him form a theater. But there was trouble getting the programs approved and the theater was disbanded a couple of times.

Amarantov said the reasons for the problems were never made completely clear to him. But a thread running through his difficulties was that Amarantov's brand of modern pantomime was somehow not "Russian" enough.

Quiet town's marshal gives anti-crime help

LYONS, Ind. — "Don't crowd people, especially young people. Be fair and you'll get along."

That's the anticrime formula of William O. Jackson, town marshal of Lyons, where there hasn't been so much as a break-in in 16 years.

Jackson, a 75-year-old retired railroad foreman and ex-cop in Kansas City, and his deputy have kept things quiet in this southwestern Indiana community of 700 persons. Recently, the town board gave Jackson a plaque in recognition of his record.

Jackson works from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. seven days a week and "when the bell rings, I'm ready to go to work."

He said he can spot a stranger "in nothing flat. The fact not many people move around at night helps.

Mischief is easier to spot."

The marshal, a widower with four children, also gets plenty of help from his deputy, Frank Manella, 59.

"We keep on the watch and that's about all we have to do," Manella said. "I've been with Jackson for 13 years, and things are real quiet here. That's the way we want it."

"We have a post office, hardware store, grocery store, restaurant, farm equipment store and some other businesses here, but there is no trouble."

Jackson, a native of Ottawa, Kan., blames hard times for the crime spiral elsewhere.
