Greek crewmen
refuse to give up
ship, demand pay

Associated Press
PHILADELPHIA — The St. Thomas has neither power nor heat, and supplies have been cut off and the crewmen haven't been paid since Jan. 7. But no one is giving up the ship.

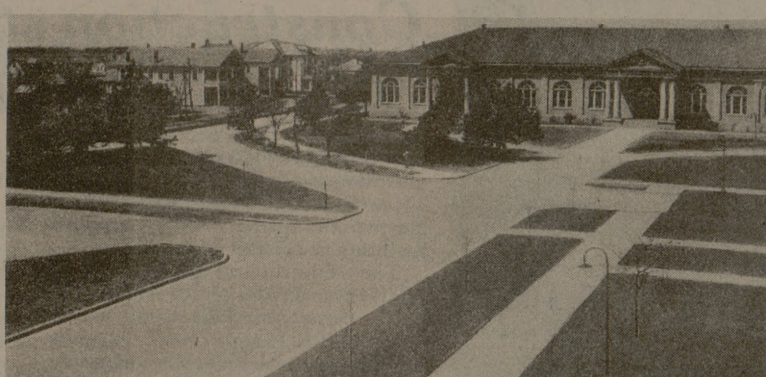

Capt. John Koukis and his 28-man crew have been stranded aboard the gray, 40,000-ton tanker since Jan. 13, when it was seized by U.S. marshals after the Greek company that owned it defaulted on a bank loan. Their food supply is so low that they had spaghetti for breakfast Tuesday.

The crewmen have been offered $35,000 plus transportation costs back to their homes in seven different countries, but the men say they won't leave until they get the full $45,000 in back pay they claim is owed to them.

The crew will not accept this offer, said Koukis. "What we want is legal. Why don't they pay us the $45,000?"

The crew's attorney, Peter Pinette, told them "all hell is going to break loose" if they rejected the offer.

In a hearing before Huyett Tuesday, the ship's creditors objected to paying the full $45,000. Huyett assembled the creditors' representatives Tuesday and ordered them to agree on a settlement.

Homes of faculty members surrounded Sbis in early days.
