Law to guard against leaks

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The criminal penalties in the new law to protect intelligence secrets would apply not only to government employees but to thousands whose jobs give them access to classified information.

While the administration bill, exempts recipients of leaked classified information from prosecution for conspiracy, it leaves them open to other legal sanctions, according to analysts who have studied the measure. The bill was introduced Wednesday.

For example, there is nothing in the bill to prevent a prosecutor who is trying to track down the source of a leak from hauling a reporter before a grand jury and demanding to know where he got information.

Lawyers on and off Capitol Hill agreed that a reporter who receives leaked classified information covered by the Ford bill becomes the witness to a crime. Past court rulings appear to give the reporter no choice in such a case but to divulge the identity of his source.

The Ford proposal follows very closely some of the most controversial provisions of a Senate bill, referred to as S1, which is a voluminous consolidation of the federal criminal code.

The controversies around S1 have stalled it in committee, which might be a clue about the congressional reception to Ford's proposal.

The S1 bill has been criticized as an "Official Secrets Act" because it would prohibit government employees from disclosing classified information to anyone.

The S1 bill exempts recipients, such as reporters, from prosecution under that section. It also defines a new crime for the publication or other unauthorized communication of the material if it is national defense information where injury to the nation or advisory to a foreign power are possible.

Charles Morgan, Washington director of the American Civil Liberties Union, said in an interview that the Ford bill would have the effect of serving notice on government employees that "the newsmen he's talking to may end up as the prime witness against him."

Under the Ford proposal, an individual who was convicted of leaking classified intelligence information could be sentenced to a maximum of five years in prison and fined $5,000. That penalty would apply to anyone "in duly authorized possession or control of information relating to intelligence sources and methods."

The definition specifies that it applies not only to government employees but also to a contractor of the United States government, an employee of a contractor of the United States government.

Morgan also said that while the proposal permits an individual to challenge whether leaked information was "lawfully classified and designated," it makes it difficult to prove.

The Ford bill said "the court shall not invalidate the classification designation unless it finds that judgment of the department, agency... was arbitrary, capricious and without a reasonable basis in fact."

"It puts the burden of proof on the criminal defendant," said Morgan.

Industrial Engineers, Aramco has plans for you in Saudi Arabia.

The Arabian American Oil Company has some excellent career openings for Senior Industrial and Management Engineers in Saudi Arabia.

The challenge.

We are looking for alert, aggressive engineers who will undertake responsibility for significant industrial engineering projects and studies involving manpower, equipment, and facility utilization studies; major cost reduction studies; and institute organization studies, job design, and job structure development.

The qualifications.

Because of the demanding responsibilities of these positions, it is preferable that you have an engineering BS plus an MBA or MS in Industrial Engineering. You will need a minimum of 5 years progressively responsible experience. Duties are in project I.E. assignments and studies, and not in classical time study/MTM I.E. It is highly desirable that your experience be in continuous process industries such as petroleum or chemical.

Why work in Saudi Arabia?

Working for Aramco in Saudi Arabia offers you several big advantages. One is the opportunity to save because of your overseas premium and cost differential. Another is our liberal vacation policies that give you the chance to travel worldwide. And besides being paid a top salary, you are offered excellent benefit programs. You will also find that Aramco provides fine school, hospital, and recreational facilities.

Send us your resume.

If you're qualified, we would like to hear from you. Send us a resume of your work and salary history, and we will be in touch with you.
