Guinness Exhibit Hall to open in May

A permanent official Guinness World Records Exhibit Hall is scheduled to open in May in the Empire State Building.

Visitor participation will be an important part of the 240 exhibits. Guests will push buttons, activate switches to light up displays, view "the smallest" recordbreakers through magnifying glasses and view recordbreaking feats and events on closed circuit color television sc-

Guinness record categories of human stunts and achievements and sports and games. One display, for example, will reveal by an X-ray the stomach of the man who swallowed 4 swords at one time, and another will show lightning as it shot through the hat of the Park Ranger who was struck 5 times and lived to tell the tale. Visitors will also hear the world's greatest car salesman go into his spiel, will be able to compare the largest locust swarm with the size of Manhattan Island, will see Joe Louis knock out more than 20 opponents, see Babe Ruth, Bobby Jones and domino tumble (15,000 one by one, as if racing along a railroad track).

On view also will be the world's most expensive shoes - mink-lined golf shoes with ruby-tipped gold spikes that sell for $6,500 per pair (orders will be taken in the museum gift shop) — along with the world's smallest playable violin next to the world's largest guitar. Of the personified replicas, the most spectacular will be a full-size figure of the world's tallest man, who at 8 feet 11.1 inches had to have a dome cut in the ceiling to accommodate the top of his head. Besides, visitors will find the world's longest moustache beard and fingernails, the biggest hamburger, the longest apple peel, the largest tire (which encircles a Volkswagen), and a dozen eating records portrayed visually. Here will be the world's smallest book and a human hair split into 14 parts. Photographs and montages will sup-plement the moving exhibits, featuring such personages as the least suc-cessful author in the world. Displays will continually be changed as records are broken and recordbreakers will be invited to make personal appearances and autograph books New records will be posted daily.
